Kidnaper-Convicts Hunted Here

4 Who Fled Road Gang Tie and Gag Mailman

Five Still Free After Two Breaks; One Surrenders At Fredericksburg

Four escaped convicts were believed in the Washington area last night after they kidnaped a rural mail carrier and left him bound and gagged in woods near Alexandria, Va.

One of two other convicts who escaped earlier in the day from the Goochland (Va.) Prison Farm surrendered peacefully to a State Police trooper in Fredericksburg, Va., about 11 o'clock last night.

He is Richard Poteet, 24, serving 10½ years.

Still at large is his comrade in the break, 22-year-old James Zollo. Poteet said Zollo was headed for Washington when they split up.

Poteet, according to police, was arrested in a Fredericksburg restaurant after State Police received a call that he was willing to surrender.

Overpowered Guard

Poteet and Zollo early yesterday overpowered a guard, took his pistol and shotgun and commandeered a truck.

For a time they held the truck driver, Parker Collins, 30, of Richmond, as hostage. Along the route of their get-away. They abandoned the truck, stole an auto, and took Collins along. Collins was freed, and the auto recovered at Fredericksburg.

The pair was seen in the Spotsylvania County community of Paytes before Poteet's arrest in Fredericksburg. Zollo's whereabouts were not determined immediately last night.

Virginia State Police last night threw a dragnet over a wide area of the State in their hunt for the five men.

The four convicts, who escaped Tuesday while on a roadgang detail in Culpeper County, kidnaped Otis S. Kilby, 39, of Boston, Va., while he was serving his RFD route between Boston and Slate Mills yesterday.

Kilby said his kidnapers left his mail pouch beside him and a shotgun they were carrying. He said they told him: "Now you try to catch us with that."

Earlier yesterday, a posse led by Culpeper County Sheriff B. Wood Wayland arrested a fifth convict who escaped with the other four.

Offers No Resistance

The arrested prisoner, Curtis B. Fultz, 26, offered no resistance when Wayland and his men approached the home of C. T. Gwinn, Culpeper County surveyor. He and the four others had spent the night in the house after ordering Lee McCallum, Gwinn's stepson, to admit them.

Both McCallum and Mailman Kilby said the convicts made no attempt to harm them.

Kilby said his ride with the men made him "pretty uneasy. I didn't know when they would wham me over the head or shoot me. They kept telling me, 'We don't want to have you want to get away.'"

Kilby said he was serving his RFD route between Boston and Slate Mills when he passed his own house, about 2 miles from

Tragedy Ends Holiday Ride

Boy Cyclist Killed by Auto; 4 Leaving School Bus Felled

A half-holiday, a mud puddle and a passing car spelled death yesterday for John Wise, 9 of 2505 Forest Glen rd., Silver Spring, Md.

John, a fourth-grade student at Woodside Elementary School, was released from class early because of a teachers' meeting.

The boy hurried home, gulped a quick lunch and then went off for a ride on his bicycle.

It happened at 12:25 p. m. on Sligo Creek pkwy, about 87 feet from Colesville rd.

John was riding at the side of the road. A mud puddle loomed in front of him. His bike went down and John was thrown against a passing automobile. He slid under the wheels and was dragged a short distance.

The Silver Spring rescue squad rushed him to the Washington Sanitarium but he was dead a few minutes after his arrival. The boy remained unidentified about three hours.

John was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joel Wise. His father is an investigator for the Federal Housing Administration. The Wises have two other children, Joanne, 13, and Jarrett Michael, 4.

Seckinger Told To Make New Milk Proposal

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

The District director of public health, ordered by the Commissioners yesterday to get back into the milk market fracas, today will bring in a new set of recommendations for ending it.

The official, Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, also is expected to tell the Commissioners:

1. There is a surplus of D. C.-inspected milk at present, but it is below the safe margin necessary to meet the changing demand of the city's consumers.

2. His plan for authorizing local dairies to handle State-inspected milk for sale to nearby Army and Navy installations and suburban customers in the same plants with D. C. permit milk for D. C. customers should be reconsidered by the Corporation Counsel's office. It was rejected Tuesday after a cursory study.

J. Russell Young Absent

On Tuesday the Commissioners decided they would determine whether a shortage existed. This action was taken while Dr. Seckinger was meeting with dairy officials to study the same question. When informed of the Commissioners' action, Dr. Seckinger said he was "out of the picture."

The recall of Dr. Seckinger to the milk feud came about yesterday morning. Commissioners Guy Mason and Gordon R. Young summoned him to a closed conference with the legal representatives of three independent dairies.

John Russell Young, president of the Board of Commissioners, was out of the District Building all day and was not present at the conference.

Both J. R. Young and Dr. Seckinger are already on record as to the minimum amount of surplus necessary for the smooth distribution of milk here.

Young testified on July 12 before the House District subcommittee on health, education and recreation (the hearing testimony was released yesterday):

"A surplus even at this time of year is about 15,000 gallons a day. For a city of this size that is not sufficient."

Dr. Seckinger told the commissioners on August 20 that the city's safe surplus level is about 17,600 gallons. The next day he put the figure at 10 percent of consumption or about 18,000 gal-

Hanley's Slip Could Cost Dewey Victory

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

NEW YORK, Oct. 25—A political upset, affecting 1952 presidential as well as current 1950 line-ups, appears an even money possibility in this State.

The New York gubernatorial contest is no longer a sure setup for Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, twice governor, twice Republican nominee for President, and still his party's titular leader.

It is developing into a horse race over a very muddy track, with the outcome anybody's guess.

His halo slightly askew, Governor Dewey has descended from his 1948 stratosphere for this one. He and his opponent, Representative Walter A. Lynch, are fighting it out neck-and-neck in a strictly "low-level" stretch.

Definitely trailing in the Senate race, and almost certain to wind up a loser, is Dewey's 74-year-old running mate, Lieut. Gov. Joe R. Hanley. Hanley made one little mistake that changed all the odds. He wrote a letter.

In agreeing to step out of the Governorship race in favor of a Dewey "draft," he was assured of an opportunity to clean up old financial obligations. Hanley wrote Representative W. Kingsland Macy (R., N. Y.).

Hanley Charges "Smear"

Dewey has denied he has ever discussed Hanley's finances with him. Hanley charges the Democrats deliberately misinterpreted the letter for "smear" purposes. But the manuscript itself and continuing Democratic charges of a "payoff" have altered the whole pitch of this campaign.

The one-time slashing prosecuting attorney is now forced to appear in a new role for him: counsel for defense. It makes a difference.

Prospects for Joe Hanley were never too bright, but before the

Albert S. Goss Dies on Stage After New York Forum Address

NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—Albert S. Goss, 68, master of the National Grange, died on the dais in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel tonight minutes after he spoke to 1500 persons attending the New York Herald Tribune Forum.

Mr. Goss

A hotel physician pronounced Goss dead of a heart attack after notables including Air Force Secretary Thomas K. Finletter, Herald-Tribune Editor Whitelaw Reid and former Ambassador to Japan Joseph C. Grew carried him from the speaker's platform.

CIO President Phillip Murray had just begun to speak when Goss was stricken.

Goss was a member of President Truman's Committee on Mobilization Policy and had been active in affairs of the Grange, national farmers' organization, since 1920. He lived at 2800 McKinley pl. nw., Washington.

Mr. Goss married Minnie E. Hand, December 21, 1907. Besides his wife he is survived by three children: Mrs. Ruth Dorothy Hansen, Mrs. Betty Jane Gulli and Warren Hand Goss.

Book and Author Luncheon Today

The Washington Post's first Book and Author Luncheon of the 1950-51 season will take place today at 1 p. m. in the Presidential Room of the Statler Hotel.

The guest speakers will be authors Jonathan Daniels, "The Man of Independence"; H. Allen Smith, "People Named Smith"; Inglis Fletcher, "Bennett's Welcome," and Jay and Audrey Walz, "The Bizarre Sisters."

A few tickets, at $3.00, remain and will be available at the front counter in the lobby of The Washington Post building from 9 a. m. to 12 noon. From 12:30 on, tickets may be bought on the mezzanine of the Statler Hotel, outside the Presidential Room.

The luncheon will begin promptly at 1 p. m.

Congress Call For Nov. 15 Is Considered

Truman May Urge Early Action on Rent, Excess Profits Tax And Other Matters

By The Associated Press

Congressional sources said last night that President Truman is thinking of issuing a pre-election call to Congress to hurry back to Washington after the balloting and work on rent control and other legislation.

The plan reported under consideration calls for Congress to reconvene November 15—eight days after the election—instead of November 27, the date previously fixed.

If the President makes up his mind to take the step, those in the know expect him to announce it in advance of the November 7 election. He holds his weekly news conference this morning, but whether the announcement will be ready then was not known last night.

Two sources, who cannot be named, informed a reporter that the special call to Congress has been under consideration at the White House. They said Mr. Truman wanted to take counsel with Democratic leaders of Senate and House before announcing any decision.

If the early call is issued, Mr. Truman is expected to argue that despite the victories in Korea, the Nation and world still face emergency conditions because of Russia's attitude. He is reported ready to say that there must be no letdown in the defense program and that as a result of the program, home-front measures such as tightened rent controls and higher taxes are urgently necessary.

Some Democratic strategists figure that such a pre-election summons to Congress would tend to help many Democrats facing contests November 7. They believe Mr. Truman's demand for a stronger rent control law would have wide appeal among tenants, although it would be unwelcome to the less-numerous landlords.

They feel, too, that such a White House call would provide material for campaign arguments that the Administration is providing strong leadership in what it views as a time of crisis.

Pleven Plan Needs Study, Acheson Says

Initiative 'Welcome' But Its Concepts Are Far-Reaching, Secretary Remarks

By Perdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

Secretary Acheson gave a polite but cautious first response yesterday to French Premier Rene Pleven's plan of mixing German, French and other regiments in a European army.

"The United States Government," said the Secretary, "welcomes the initiative taken by the French government in proposing a method for organizing armed forces in western Europe, including those of western Germany, to deter and if necessary to resist aggression.

"This represents a further approach toward the objective of bringing the common interests of the free nations of Europe more closely together within the framework of the North Atlantic Community."

But, the Secretary hastened to add, "this proposal, which contains many far-reaching concepts, deserves and requires further study which the United States Government will undertake to give it."

Replies to Soviet Protests

At the same time the Secretary issued a stinging statement saying that Soviet protests would not stop the Western Allies from using German help in the defense of western Europe.

Officials of the United States and other North Atlantic treaty nations here were not sure what to make of the French scheme, put forward by Pleven after a long struggle within the French Cabinet.

If it meant that the French were willing at last to accept the principle of using German manpower, then well and good. The 12 North Atlantic treaty nations could then go ahead with their initial plans for recruiting, training and paying German troops, and also for appointing a supreme Allied commander and deciding how many men each nation should commit to the combined Western army.

But if the French should insist on their entire plan as a condition for agreeing to the use of German manpower, then the fat would indeed be in the fire, and North

U. S. Moving Tons of Files To Give Space to 6000 Workers

(Related Civil Defense Stories on Page 13)

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

The Government is going to squeeze 6000 new employes into existing buildings by moving thousands of files to the old Navy torpedo plant in Alexandria.

Ultimately room for 10,000 workers will be found this way.

The move, now well under way but hitherto undisclosed, is to meet the urgent demand for office space because of the mobilization program. It also ties in with civil defense plans and Hoover Commission recommendations.

The torpedo plant, rechristened the Alexandria Federal Records Center and now being refurbished, will house Army, Navy and civilian files which must be kept for anything from 1 to 20 years. But each box has a "throwaway date" on it, in an effort to cut down on the mountain of old papers the Government always is hoarding.

Already the Army and Navy have established record centers at the Alexandria location on the Potomac River at King st. Archives' records management division is handling the job for the nonmilitary agencies under direction of General Services Administration.

Things like these are afoot: From the Pentagon are coming enough records (including all captured German documents, old pay accounts, World War II documents) to make room for 2000 extra people there.

From the Navy's three old buildings on Columbia pike near the Pentagon enough records to make room for 600 workers are being moved. Census is shifting records from Suitland to let another 300 in there. Selective Service will move 1000 people into a number of residence halls on Oklahoma ave. ne. because Public Housing records stored there are being shifted to Alexandria.

Small, but useful, amounts of space are being found elsewhere—Interior, Coast Guard and so on—the same way.

Files are not being double-decked but they can be eventually. When they are, the old torpedo plant's three buildings will house what took up a million square feet of office space, enough for 10,000 workers.

The Alexandria center is not going to be dead storage by any means. About 250 people, some of whom are now there, will guard it (there's going to be an electronic security system before long) and act as a search staff when an agency calls for some document. As a rule it can be located and delivered to Washington in a couple of hours.

The Hoover Commission estimated in 1948 that the Federal Government had enough records to fill six Pentagons. It called for such record centers as that at Alexandria.

The commission also called for emptying out the expensive steel filing cases and dumping the contents into cardboard boxes on steel shelves. That is being done.

The result is that some 7000 cabinets are soon going to be available for use again. Everett Alldredge, chief of Archives' record center branch, says that over 100,000 could be freed and that would mean saving millions of dollars usually spent for buying new ones. (There are about a million Government filing cabinets in the Washington area.)

Standard Oil Official

Marion W. Boyer Appointed General Manager by AEC

Marion W. Boyer, New York chemical engineer and vice president of Esso Standard Oil Co., yesterday was appointed general manager of the United States Atomic Energy Commission.

He will take over the top management post of the far-flung, five-billion-dollar A-bomb enterprise on November 1, filling a vacancy which has existed since Carroll L. Wilson resigned in a huff last August 15.

Carleton Shugg, who has been serving as acting general manager since Wilson quit with a blast at new AEC Chairman Gordon Dean, will return to his old post as deputy general manager.

Boyer was the first person to be appointed under new legislation which gives the five-member commission, rather than President Truman, authority to hire the general manager.

The law also empowers the commission to fix the general manager's salary, up to a ceiling of $20,000 a year. Dean did not say how much his salary will be.

Boyer, 49, is a native of Muncie, Ind., who rose through Standard Oil ranks during 23 years of service to his present position as vice president in charge of all manufacturing operations.

Hazard Pay for GIs in Korea Pigeon-Holed for 3 Months

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

It may not help the morale of GIs in Korea to hear it now, but a proposal to extend "hazardous duty pay" to them was approved by top Army generals last summer—and then apparently pigeon-holed by "higher authority."

The plan to give front-line infantrymen—while actually fighting—the extra pay now allowed paratroopers, bomb-disposal men and part-time fliers was prepared by the Army General Staff. According to well-informed sources, it was indorsed by Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Army chief of staff, and had Gen. Omar Bradley's unofficial blessing.

But it seems to have gotten stuck somewhere on the assistant secretary level and remained sidetracked there the past two or three months.

What happened is not quite clear. The plan would require legislation, but Congress did not even get a chance to say yes or no. Perhaps the cost was what caused the trouble, or possibly the objections of those now drawing hazard pay against reopening the whole controversial problem prevailed.

The Army proposal would give GIs in actual front-line combat—only as far back as battalion headquarters—an additional $50 a month. Officers leading them would receive $100 extra. That is the extra compensation regularly paid to airborne troops, divers, some fliers and others engaged in extra hazardous duty. Regular

Mrs. Keyes accused her husband of calling her vile names, and even calling her "that woman." She testified that he threw egg shells on the floor and once tossed a box of strawberries in her face.

Force Going 'All the Way'; 50,000 Men Are Landing

Marines, Infantry Pour Ashore to Back So. Koreans' March North on East Coast

SEOUL (Thursday), Oct. 26 (AP).—American troops sped unopposed up Korea's west coast close to the Manchuria frontier today and United States Marines spearheaded a 50,000-man landing for a push up the east coast.

A United States Eighth Army spokesman said he knew of no orders that would halt the Americans short of Korea's frontier with Chinese Communist Manchuria and Soviet Siberia. He indicated the troops would go all the way. Informed sources in Tokyo had understood American and British Commonwealth troops would stop 20 miles from the border to avoid any incidents while South Koreans went clear to the border.

A South Korean regiment, operating in the middle of the peninsula, was expected momentarily to reach the Yalu River, separating Manchuria and North Korea.

First U. S. Troops Near Border

Until today, there had been no word of American troops participating in the war-ending drive to the border.

An Eighth Army spokesman said the United States Fifth Infantry Regiment crossed the Chongchon River at Sinanju and hit out for the town of Sonchon, 20 miles from the border.

The Fifth took the westernmost road in Korea, paralleling a railroad. Both lead from Sonchon to the Korean border town of Sinuiju. Across the city is the Manchurian city of Antung.

The big landing operation on the east coast poured troops ashore in landing craft this morning from ships which had been standing off Wonsan for six days while minesweepers cleared a channel through a huge field of 1000 floating mines.

U. S. Will Veto Anyone But Lie For U. N. Post

LAKE SUCCESS, N. Y., Oct. 25 (U.P.).—The United Nations Security Council today rejected two Russian-supported candidates for secretary-general as the United States announced it would veto anybody but Norway's Trygve Lie for the post.

In a secret session, the 11-nation council voted against recommending either Brig. Gen. Carlos P. Romulo of the Philippines or Dr. Charles A. Malik of Lebanon to succeed Lie when his term expires February 2. In each instance the vote was four in favor, none against and seven countries abstaining. Russia, Nationalist China, Egypt and India supported both candidates.

Russia's Jacob A. Malik nominated his unrelated namesake from Lebanon and China's Dr. Tingfu F. Tsiang proposed Romulo.

The Russians sought a postponement of the council's decision, but were voted down. But Russia's Malik said he had a new candidate to put into nomination and he was expected to ask for another council session to consider the issue further.

Failure of either Romulo or Lebanon's Malik to receive the seven votes necessary for a council recommendation obviated the use of the veto for the first time by the United States. But Ambassador Warren R. Austin made it clear he would not have hesitated to use the United States veto to block the nomination of anybody but Lie.

The United States position was that the United Nations, by ousting Lie now, would in effect be punishing him for the forthright position he took in the Korean war.

The eventual result appeared to be that, with the Russians vetoing Lie and the United States threatening to veto anybody but Lie, his term would be "extended" for a probable three years by the General Assembly.

400 District Area Schools Invited To Post Book Fair

Children from more than 400 schools in the District of Columbia area have been invited to attend The Washington Post's Children's Book Fair next week at the Department of Commerce building.

Special lectures will be given Monday through Friday by members of the Washington Children's Book Guild, an organization of juvenile book authors and illustrators.

Teachers have been asked to make appointments for their classes to attend the lectures from 9:30 a. m. to 3 p. m. each day. Appointments may be made by calling The Washington Post, National 4200, ext. 391.

Foes to Drop Suit Against Fairfax School Bond Issue

A motion to withdraw the suit blocking Fairfax County's $10,500,000 school improvement program will be filed today in Fairfax Circuit Court, John Paul Jones, attorney for the plaintiffs, said last night.

Agreement to withdraw the suit was reached late yesterday after a 45-minute conference between Jones, the plaintiffs, Charles E. Gardner, sr., and Paul E. Rheinhart, jr., and Attorney John Alexander, representing the Fairfax School Board, Jones said.

The Gardner-Rheinhart suit challenged validity of a May 30 referendum in which voters approved the school expenditure.

King Visits Commons Room; What's More, Keeps His Head

LONDON, Oct. 25 (AP).—King George VI trod watchfully today through the new stone and oak House of Commons building and left 50 minutes later with his head still on his shoulders.

The last King who had the nerve to enter the House of Commons, Charles I, was beheaded. But the circumstances in the two cases differed. For one thing, the new building won't officially become the House of Commons until Thursday.

King Charles visited Commons 308 years ago to arrest leaders of the opposition. This started a revolution and Charles was beheaded by Oliver Cromwell.

King George was just looking. He went to see the new lawmaking chamber, to which his dominions overseas have contributed furnishings.

Charles had gone with a squad of soldiers. George took his wife, Queen Elizabeth, and his mother, Queen Mary.

Buckingham Palace spokesmen said the King had gone to the building "on a purely private visit."

On his tour, George had no time to see many of the new things in the building.

Queen Elizabeth sat on the leather-covered foam rubber benches on the Labor government's side of the House. She appeared to find them comfortable—but her comment went unreported.

Tibetans Reported Ready to Surrender

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

TSEPON SHAKABPA, finance minister of Tibet, the leader of a delegation preparing to depart from New Delhi, India, for negotiations in Peiping, denied his country had been invaded by Chinese Communists

HONGKONG, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—The remote little theocracy of Tibet, on the roof of the Himalaya Mountains, has decided to surrender to the Chinese Communists and will start negotiations soon in hope of keeping as much of its prized autonomy as possible, dispatches said tonight.

A press dispatch from Peiping, the Chinese Communist capital, said the men who rule Tibet for the teen-age "living Buddha" had agreed to send a delegation there at once "to negotiate a basis upon which Tibet will accept Chinese Communist sovereignty."

The negotiations will be conducted within the framework of proposals that the Communist government sent to Lhasa three days ago—before the Peiping announcement that a powerful Red army had been ordered to invade the country—the dispatch said.

(A United Press London dispatch said that advices indicated the Tibetan government had abandoned hope of successful resistance to the Reds and would seek only to get the best terms it could.

(Private telegrams received in London from Takdhag Pandit Hothoktu, the regent who rules for the boy Buddha, indicated that he felt Tibet had been deserted by the Western powers, the dispatch said. Takdhag months ago appealed for Western support to keep out the Reds.)

The Chinese Communists long have had a powerful army poised on the frontier of Tibet. Yesterday Peiping announced that its troops had been ordered to invade the country and "liberate" it.

Tonight, the Peiping dispatch—received by the Hongkong leftist newspaper Takungpao—said that after receipt of the Communist proposals the Tibetan government had ordered a delegation to proceed to Peiping at once.

This delegation has been in New Delhi, the capital of India, for six weeks. It has been negotiating with the Chinese Communist Ambassador to India.

It was announced in New Delhi yesterday that Britain had promised the delegates transit facilities. The delegates are to fly to Hongkong via Calcutta and proceed into Chinese territory.

U. S. Officials Suspect Red Bluff on 'Invasion'

By The Associated Press

American official authorities suspect that the Chinese Communists are bluffing in talking about invading Tibet at this time.

Without entirely ruling out the possibility of an invasion, experts on the remote and lofty mid-Asian land said yesterday that high winter winds and icy mountain passes made large-scale military operations unlikely for months to come.

Radio Peiping broadcast that the China Reds are moving on the neighbor mountainland to "free three million Tibetans from imperialistic oppression." At New Delhi the Indian Foreign Ministry said it has heard of "certain troop movements and incursions" near the frontier but there was no support for the invasion report elsewhere.

Secretary of State Dean Acheson told reporters the State Department had no information beyond what was broadcast. Peiping has made the invasion threat before.

Although Tibet has been visited by few white men, the State Department has recent first-hand information from the reports of two groups of Americans who fled from West China across the "top of the world" on the approach of Communist forces. One group included J. Hall Paxton, former consul at Tihwa, and the other was led by Douglas S. Mackiernan, a vice consul who met death last April when fired on by Tibetan border guards.

Paxton, with an earlier start, managed to reach India in November after difficulties in crossing the mountain passes. Mackiernan's group had to hole up for the winter before pushing on. With his party was Frank Bessac, a research scholar, who brought detailed reports on conditions.

Bessac advised that with the approach of winter high winds offer even greater obstacles to travel than the increasing cold. Two main invasion routes are open from China, by way of Chungking and Chengtu and through Lanchou and Sinning. Neither is inviting even when conditions are most favorable, normally beginning in early summer.

Truman Seen Set to Embrace Chinese Reds

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 25 (U.P.). Harold E. Stassen charged tonight that President Truman is "getting ready to embrace" the Chinese Communist regime after the fall congressional elections.

In a radio speech, the president of the University of Pennsylvania said any such move would be "another blunder that may require redemption in American blood, as the earlier Korean blunder has been redeemed."

Stassen asserted Mr. Truman is acting "upon the advice of the State Department" but is "unwilling to tell the American people" about the plan at this time.

After the election, he predicted, the Administration will "quietly encourage and raise no serious objection" to seating Communist China in the United Nations.

"In other words, President Truman is getting ready to embrace the Chinese Communist dictator Mao Tse-tung, to place a United Nations veto club in his evil hands, and to put a Formosa present in his pocket."

Plant Seized in North Korea Believed Uranium Refinery

HUNGNAM, North Korea, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—A vital Russia research project, believed by United States atomic energy experts to have been a Soviet uranium ore process-plant, has been captured by the South Korean army.

Authoritative sources in Washington said the United States Atomic Energy Commission has known about the plant for a long time. They hinted that it would not surprise them to learn that a second similar plant also had been found in North Korea.

The huge factory was surrounded by a triple fence, two layers of barbed wire and one high voltage electric barrier. Inside that area was a section surrounded by another triple electrical fence, ringed with guard units.

A building inside the fences had been constructed along the lines of Kansas City grain elevators. It is 60 feet high, with a folding metal door 40 feet high.

Behind this strange building is a compound 100 yards long, 50 yards wide and crowded with a concentration of high voltage electrical wiring. Steel beams and great glass insulators support power cables as thick as a man's waist. They apparently powered two huge machines which seemed to be the nerve center of the intricate set-up.

Sand bags had been piled around the machines to protect them from explosions and apparently they had been unhurt by United States air raids.

Built like a massive square bottle of thick layers of hard metal, each machine was about 25 feet high and 10 feet thick. Massive glass insulators poked from the top toward the electrical maze above. Six pipes, like gas lines, fed into it from one side and a drain pipe led from the bottom into a sludge trench running through the compound.

Instruction signs on the machinery were in Korean and Russian.

A high scale centrigrade thermometer on the face of mysterious devices indicated great heat was involved in whatever processes were carried out.

American officers believed the machine might have been used to process some sort of ore quarried and brought directly from an abandoned placer mining site northwest of the town.

It was emphasized in Washington that an uranium ore processing plant cannot produce atomic explosives. Literally mountains of ore must be processed to get small amounts of refined uranium metal. This then must be shipped to the vastly more intricate nuclear reactor plants which produce U-235 or plutonium and atom bomb fuels.

Presumably, authorities said, the all-important final stages of the production process are accomplished at plants inside Russia.

French Battle Foe in South Of Indo-China

HONGKONG (Thursday), Oct. 26 (U.P.).—The Communist Viet Minh news agency today said fighting against the French in Indo-China has broken out in central Annam and Cochin China at the southern extremity of Indo-China.

The Viet Minh news agency said French troops withdrew from "many posts" in central Annam midway between Saigon and Hanoi under heavy pressure, especially around the coastal city of Hue.

U. S. Is Asked to Curb Travel to Indo-China

SAIGON, Indo-China, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—United States Minister Donald R. Heath announced today that he has recommended the halting of all further travel to Indo-China of wives, children and other dependants of American officials.

Heath's recommendation, forwarded to Washington, came only a few hours after Communist-led Viet Minh rebels attacked the French northern mountain fortress of Laokay, the last French outpost guarding Indo-China's rice bowl.

Officials said the attack appeared to foreshadow the biggest battle of the 5-year-old guerilla war.

The United States Minister said his recommendation was a temporary measure "while we take stock of what is happening."

(The State Department in Washington will ask American authorities in Indo-China for information on measures that may be necessary to protect Americans there, a spokesman disclosed today.)

There were believed to be about 200 Americans in Indo-China, most of them missionaries. Sixteen Americans were reported to be in Tonkin province near the fighting area. Heath said transportation facilities had been offered to American missionaries in Tonkin, but that no evacuation orders had been issued to anyone.

In addition to the Communist attack on Laokay, a French spokesman said the Viet Minh forces had attacked two villages in the vicinity of Chu, 18 miles southwest of the frontier fortress of Dinhlap, but that the attacks were unsuccessful.

Massacre Escaped by Yanks Leaping From Korean Train

FUKUOKA, Japan (AP).—A predawn jump from a speeding North Korean Red train saved the lives of Corpl. Arlton B. Craig of Bedford, Va., and four of his buddies.

Craig told today how they escaped the Sunchon massacre by jumping from the prison train as it headed northward in the darkness.

Craig was captured July 26, during the bitter, desperate battle for Taejon. He was with the Nineteenth Regiment of the United States Twenty-fourth Division and was one of the men cut off when the Communists surged across the Kum River.

He lost 50 pounds during his imprisonment, but doctors at the Fukuoka Hospital, where he is recuperating, said his condition is excellent.

The 20-year-old corporal said the North Koreans treated him fairly well during the early days of captivity. He was marched to Seoul with other prisoners. He was held in the infamous schoolhouse in the capital where liberating troops later found his name among dozens of others scrawled on the blackboard by the prisoners.

Craig also survived the death march from Seoul to the Red capital of Pyongyang when more than 300 prisoners were herded along the road and the weakest were shot.

He said the treatment grew worse. Then the prisoners were jammed into a train and sent northward.

Just before the train reached a main tunnel, about 10 miles north of Sunchon, Craig and four others hopped off. They made their way through the fields alongside the railroad and escaped detection.

Those left aboard the train were taken from it shortly thereafter and machinegunned. A total of 68 died.

Craig and his friends hid out until they sighted the men in a First Cavalry division task force.

U. N. Asked to Brand Aggression a Crime

LAKE SUCCESS, N. Y., Oct. 25 (AP).—The United States and five other nations today called on the United Nations Assembly to brand open or fifth-column aggression as "the gravest of all crimes against peace and security throughout the world."

The proposal was introduced into the Assembly's political committee as the Western answer to a Soviet "peace" plan asking for armaments reduction and the branding as a war criminal of the first government to use the atom bomb.

Sponsored by Britain, France, Lebanon, Mexico and the Netherlands as well as the United States, the resolution was put before the 60-nation committee shortly after Australia's Percy C. Spender upheld the use of the atom bomb against aggressors.

"The way of the aggressor has got to be made hard," the Australian Foreign Minister told the committee. "The most heinous crime against humanity is the crime of aggression and the use of the atom bomb against aggression is not a crime."

Any Aggression "Gravest Crime"

The joint Western resolution asked the Assembly to reaffirm that "whatever the weapons used, any aggression, whether committed openly or by fomenting civil strife, is the gravest of all crimes against peace and security throughout the world."

Introduced by Netherlands Delegate Dr. G. J. Van Heuven Goedhart, it also called upon every nation to accept effective international control of atomic energy on the basis already approved by the U. N. and to regulate all arms and armies with a view toward their gradual reduction.

Speaking for the non-Communist world in the two-day-old debate on the Soviet resolution, Spender said the Russian plan was based on the Stockholm peace appeal which he described as a "piece of international fraud." He declared:

"If a nation defies the Charter to which we are solemnly pledged and itself resorts to armed aggression, can it be realistically argued that there should be an absolute prohibition against a nation which is the subject of aggression using the atomic bomb as a defensive measure if the circumstances render it necessary in order that it may survive as a free people?"

Spender praised President Truman's proposal that the question of atomic control and reduction of nonatomic weapons be attacked afresh with one instead of two U. N. commissions working on the problem. Mr. Truman's proposal, advanced yesterday in his United Nations Day speech, was being studied by several delegations today with a view to embodying it in a formal resolution to the Assembly.

Praises Truman Proposal

Van Heuven Goedhart described the Soviet resolution as "a peace dish flavored with some anti-warmongering propaganda and served with a sauce of beautiful words." He called it "the 1950 version of an old Soviet tune, a new made-to-measure suit for the 1950 appearance of the Soviet Union as the only true champion of peace in our troubled world."

Van Heuven Goedhart said that for the "common man" and the "overwhelming majority" of the members of the United Nations "it is not essential whether human beings die from poison gas, artillery fire or atomic bombs. For them it is essential that they die, die as a consequence of an unprovoked attack, which in their sound view is a crime against humanity, irrespective of the 'means of mass destruction' used by the aggressor."

Bolivia also introduced a counter-proposal to the Soviet resolution. It would outlaw the "use of atomic weapons as instruments of aggression." It also would condemn war propaganda and urge the five major powers to seek new ways of reaching an understanding.

Pleven's Plan Or No Arming, French Decree

PARIS (Thursday), Oct. 26 (AP). Parliament today approved Premier Rene Pleven's plan for a supranational European army as the only way France will accept the rearmament of Germans. The vote was 343 to 225.

Pleven's plan calls for a west European defense minister, responsible to a council representing the interested governments and also to an international parliament, to administer the army. All member countries would contribute troops, including Germany.

Shortly before the vote former Premier Edouard Daladier declared the plan aready was doomed by the cool reception given it in Britain, Belgium and western Germany.

Called Decided Fact

Daladier said he believed all other North Atlantic Pact nations would unite against the French plan.

"German rearmament is now a decided if not an accomplished fact," he declared bitterly.

In closing the two-day debate, Pleven made it clear he would accept no other plan for an independent German army.

"We are ready to discuss all details, but if the principle of our plan is ruled out we will maintain our refusal to German rearmament," he declared.

He denied that the plan—to create a European army after the Schuman plan to merge west European coal and steel production is signed, and after the formation of a council of governments and appointment of a European defense minister—would cause delay.

After the vote Jules Moch, Socialist Defense Minister, smiled and said, "Now I shall be in a position to say no."

He is due to fly to the United States tonight for further Atlantic defense pact talks. Last month he refused to accept Secretary of State Dean Acheson's proposal for the use of German divisions in a European army.

U. S.-Canada Pact to Be Signed Today

The United States and Canada will sign an agreement this morning virtually wiping out the frontier between the two countries as far as defense production is concerned.

The agreement will assure Canadian factories of equal access to strategic and scarce materials in the common rearmament effort, and will revive cooperation between the two North American neighbors.

It will do so by reaffirming the Hyde Park agreement of April, 1941, between President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Mackenzie King. According to an official statement issued at that time:

"It was agreed as a general principle that in mobilizing the resources of this continent each country should provide the other with the defense articles which it is best able to produce, and, above all, produce quickly, and that production program should be coordinated to this end."

The Hyde Park agreement never lapsed, formally, but the government agencies that carried it out, such as the War Production Board here, went out of existence at the end of the war.

Since then, especially in the past year, the Canadians have struggled hard to get the principles of Hyde Park back into practice. At first the United States government, and especially United States industries, hung back.

But since the Korean war the Canadians put new urgency into their efforts, and they found a response at last. The Canadians are not only spending an added 300 million dollars for North Atlantic rearmament; they are also making one big order of naval guns for the United States near Montreal, and they expect many more orders in the near future.

The new agreement should make it easier for the United States to farm out rearmament orders to Canada, with United States dollars, if Canada can make the goods as cheaply, efficiently and quickly.

The two countries will not have to impose identical controls, to prevent price rises and scarcities. The Canadians believe that with their smaller economy they can achieve the necessary results without the more cumbersome organization needed here.

The language of the agreement today will be vague, and in broad terms, to keep it flexible. It will be signed at the State Department by Secretary Acheson and Ambassador Hume Wrong. Trade Minister C. D. Howe will be here from Ottawa for the ceremony.

U. S. to Appoint Director To Coordinate Arms Plans

The Administration has decided at last, after weeks of interagency consultations, to appoint a top-level director to take charge of America's multi-billion-dollar international defense programs.

The new director will be in the State Department, a right-hand-man to Secretary Acheson but with responsibilities that will be almost as wide as the Government itself.

Within the State Department he will be the highest ranking official in the fields of military assistance and North Atlantic Treaty organization. In these fields the assistant secretaries, the economic officers and all others down the line will be subject to his decisions.

In dealings with other agencies he will speak for the State Department on foreign defense matters, but he will also pull together the work of the Defense Department, the Economic Cooperation Administration and the Treasury. In his office will be a high-ranking Defense and ECA official, and when necessary, a Treasury man, so that he will, in effect, head a general staff of enormous power.

A related decision, also reached this week by inter-agency agreement, is to put ECA in charge of spurring European armament production as well as civilian recovery. The huge military assistance bill passed by Congress last month provided up to 475 million dollars for this purpose—most of it to be spent in Canada and western Europe for military goods, raw materials or plant expansion.

The Defense Department will continue to be responsible for providing the billions of dollars' worth of American-made weapons, and probably the raw materials and semifinished goods, to be sent to Europe from here under military assistance programs.

The occupant of the new director's post has not yet been named, and no one has yet been approached. The choice is expected to fall on an outsider or on some Government official who is free of the bureaucratic loyalties that have produced endless fugging and hauling in interagency work on rearmament up to now.

The vast expansion of the military aid program, and the momentous decision to station American troops in Europe in a combined army, probably would have come more quickly and more painlessly for scores of high officials if interagency coordination had been smoother.

The troubles between State, Defense and ECA were especially bad while Louis A. Johnson was Secretary of Defense; but even now, with the best possible cooperation among the agencies, there is serious waste of effort due to overlapping jurisdictions.

Within the State Department the military assistance staff formerly headed by James Bruce, and the North Atlantic Treaty staff, have been too low in status to do their work effectively. The new director is expected to inherit Bruce's $16,000 salary until the next Congress can set up his new post by legislative action.

Acheson Views Pleven's Plan Cautiously

Atlantic defense planning might be delayed indefinitely.

For the Pleven plan, as understood here, calls for the formation of an intermingled European army as a part of the proposed North Atlantic force, together with American, Canadian and British divisions.

The European army, presumably to consist of continental Europeans only, would be under a "European defense minister"—although no such individual exists—and would be responsible not to individual governments but to a "European parliament"—namely the shadowy Council of Europe at Strasbourg with enhanced powers.

The inclination yesterday was to regard much of the Pleven plan as sugarcoating to make it easier for the French Parliament to swallow the use of German manpower. Certainly Acheson went out of his way yesterday to be gentle with the Pleven proposals at this time.

He declined to answer when a questioner at his press conference asked whether the Pleven scheme was in line with the concept agreed to by the Foreign Ministers of the treaty nations in New York last month.

He also sought to assure the French that the United States still supported the Schuman Plan for the pooling of French and German coal and steel industries.

The Schuman Plan has been languishing in recent weeks, and the French were afraid that Acheson had dealt it a death blow by proposing the use of German troops.

Yesterday Acheson said the Schuman Plan was more important than ever; the United States hoped for the greatest possible success in working it out, and hoped the plan might be consummated soon.

His answer to the Russians on the German question was an angry one, in the form of a long and bitterly worded formal statement. It was a reply to the declaration issued at Prague last weekend after a two-day meeting of Soviet and satellite ministers.

"We will always hope for and welcome tangible proof that Soviet intentions have changed," Acheson declared. "The Prague statement gives us no such proof."

"Instead, it abuses by its perversion of language the world's hope for peace anad understanding, for an end to fear and threats. Against that abuse I raise a solemn protest."

The record showed, said the Secretary, "that we have always been eager to cooperate in the search for a plan which would relieve tensions, restore German unity and liquidate the tragic heritage of the last war . . .

"We who have striven so hard for these things want actions—we want the threatening East German army disbanded, the capricious restraints on internal German trade removed, and free democratic elections held in all of Germany."

Then, point by point, Acheson rebutted the four proposals of the Soviet-bloc statement.

The first proposal, for a four-power stand against the remilitarization of Germany, Acheson branded as hypocritical. It should, he said, have been addressed to the Soviet government, in whose zone 50,000 Germans had been "organized, trained and equipped with tanks and artillery."

The second, for removal of restrictions on German peacetime economy, should also have been addressed to the Soviet Union, "which blockaded Berlin, which imposes the most arbitrary and erratic restrictions on commerce entering or leaving its zone of occupation, and which has destroyed all economic initiative in the zone by the system of Communist monopoly of enterprise and industry."

The third Soviet proposal, for an immediate peace treaty with Germany, is impossible, said Acheson, until the German people "freely elect a national government, as we have proposed again and again."

And the fourth Soviet proposal, for an all-German constitutional convention equally divided between East and West Germany, was "even more insubstantial than the rest," Acheson said. Who would choose the East German delegates? The Communist Party? And "why should the 18 million captive Germans of the East have equal representation with the 47 million free Germans of the West?"

Only by "free, open, supervised democratic elections all over Germany," he said, can a genuine all-German government be formed, "and only then can we talk sensibly of a peace treaty."

Yanks Nearing Manchuria Border

behind the leathernecks included the United States Seventh Infantry division and two battalions of South Korean Marines.

Despite indications that the Korean fighting was near an end, a spokesman for Maj. Gen. E. M. Almond's Tenth Corps headquarters at Wonsan said the operation was strategically important.

The landing will put enough military muscle into Northeast Korea to dissuade the Chinese Communists from any possible last-minute intervention in Korea, he said.

The First Marines made the Inchon landing last September 15 which turned the tide of war in South Korea and changed it swiftly to a rout in North Korea. Right behind them at Inchon came the Seventh Infantry.

830 Miles by Sea

These American divisions, after being brought 830 miles around the Korean Peninsula from Inchon, began landings at Wonsan to support two South Korean divisions driving north toward the borders of Manchuria and Siberia.

The South Korean Capital Division was 110 air miles north of Wonsan and about 40 miles from Songjin. That seacoast town is 75 miles from the Manchurian border. The South Korean Third Division was moving inland from the capital in a parallel push.

Leading the race to the border was the Seventh Regiment of the South Korean Sixth Division. It entered the town of Kojang, 20 miles from the border at 10 o'clock last night after covering 22 miles.

It expected to reach the Yalu River border before nightfall.

The regiment "must be well on its way," a Korean military advisory group spokesman said today.

Turned From Kanggye

This force originally pushed up a road leading toward Kanggye, reported North Korean Communist refugee capital. The road reaches the border at Manpojin. Finding the road impassable beyond Huichon, the South Koreans pulled back and took a road forking northwestward toward Sonchon, 50 miles southwest of Manpojin.

Another regiment of the Sixth drove from Onjong toward the Yalu River on a highway running to Pyoktong. The regiment was reported last night 6 miles northwest of Onjong and 38 miles from the frontier.

Two other South Korean divisions—the Eighth and First—were moving toward the border on the flanks of the Sixth but were well behind it.

The only Red opposition was reported by the First division.

The First had to beat down "stubborn resistance," a spokesman said, before driving into Unsan yesterday. Unsan is 65 miles north of the captured Red capital of Pyongyang and about 55 miles southeast of the Manchurian border.

Eighth South of Huichon

The South Korean Eighth Division still was considerably south of Huichon, which is about 58 miles southeast of the boundary.

The British Commonwealth Twenty-seventh Brigade completed crossing the Chonchon River, overcame light Red resistance and entered Pakchon 65 miles from the border. Then the brigade began crossing the Taeryong River.

The brigade's point of operation was close to the coastal road taken by the United States Fifth Infantry Regiment toward Sonchon.

The United States Eighth Army said today its total bag of Communist prisoners exceeds 110,000. That does not include prisoners taken last week in the Tenth Corps area on the east coast where landings began today.

The Far East Air Force said today that targets were scarce even for the few planes assigned to ground support. The major air force job was ferrying supplies for the northward push.

Carrier-based plane pilots reported spotting a 30-mile-long Red highway convoy Tuesday night in northeast Korea. There was no further word on it today, but Marine fliers said they knocked out 31 animal-drawn vehicles and nine trucks yesterday in the same general area. The planes flew from a field at Wonsan.

OTHER UNITS TO FOLLOW—The First Marine Division landed at Wonsan with other units of the 50,000-man Tenth Corps, including the Seventh United States Infantry Division and two battalions of South Korean Marines, to follow. Tokyo sources said American and British troops, operating behind South Korean spearheads, have been directed to stay out of the area (shaded) 20 miles from the North Korean-Manchurian border to avoid an international incident. French Alcohol Sale to U. S. Faces Probe

Senator Guy M. Gillette (D., Iowa), yesterday announced that his Senate Agriculture Subcommittee on Utilization of Farm Crops, plans to investigate the recent purchase of 112 million gallons of alcohol from France.

A contract to buy the alcohol for the Government's synthetic rubber program was signed last week by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Gillette also stated that beginning November 14 his committee will resume its probe into recent price rises in coffee and meats. A decision to investigate recent increases in milk prices will depend upon a preliminary survey now underway, he said.

The price for the French alcohol is reportedly higher than the cost of similar alcohol made in this country from surplus potatoes or soft corn or grain sorghums. American distillers, it was stated last night, have offered to produce a similar quantity of alcohol from surplus grain at less than the French price. The Commodity Credit Corporation is at present destroying millions of bushels of potatoes that could be turned into alcohol.

At the same time Midwestern farmers are looking for a market for vast amounts of unstorable soft corn in this year's crop. Soft corn, experts say, can be turned into alcohol as well as fully matured corn.

Modified Milk Proposal Due

lons. Yesterday he again favored the 10 percent figure.

Figures submitted to the Health Department by the independents and their bitter enemy, the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association, indicated Tuesday that the surplus, as of a week ago, was running about 3700 gallons.

Yesterday afternoon Dr. Seckinger conferred privately with the spokesmen for the independents, who again pressed for a decision on what will happen next Wednesday when the ban on State-inspected milk is scheduled to be reimposed.

Today's conference may also discuss the letter sent Tuesday by Senator Guy M. Gillette (D., Iowa), chairman of the Senate agriculture subcommittee on food. Senator Gillette asked 11 pointed questions on the proposed ban and asked for a reply by this afternoon.

Among the questions were:

"What amount of milk is needed to supply a safe surplus?

"Will the effect of your termination order of October 31, either directly or indirectly force the independent dairies to purchase milk from said association (Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association?)

"Do you contemplate amending the new milk regulations so as to make them conform with regulations of neighboring States?"

Officials of the Embassy Dairy, Wakefield-Model Farms and High's, and Ralph Torreyson, milk broker, formally applied to the Commissioners for permits to buy milk from non-locally inspected sources, contending they were short of milk already.

Embassy said it was short 11,800 gallons for its customers last week and may need another 3500 gallons for the Navy. Wakefield said it was short 500 gallons a day and High's 1000 gallons a day, as of last Saturday.

Gene Jones Jumps With Paratroops; Must Be Well Now

A film showing Gene and his twin, Charley, parachuting north of the Red capital of Pyongyang with U. N. paratroopers in Korea was shown yesterday over WNBW during the Kate Smith hour.

Gene is apparently completely recovered from the shrapnel wounds he received during the landing at Inchon. The Jones boys, who are 25, are now reported marching north with Canadian and Australian troops.

Before going to Korea as NBC newsreel cameramen, Gene was a photographer for The Washington Post and Charley a photographer for the Washington Times-Herald.

D. C. Drunk Court, 'Sneaky Pete' Dose Prove Big Burden

The procession of drunks through Municipal Court yesterday was too much for 67-year-old Aloysius King.

After sitting in drunk court as a spectator for two hours, King himself was arrested for being drunk in the men's room across the corridor.

King is scheduled to reappear in drunk court today, this time as a defendant. Police from the court liaison office arrested King, an almost empty bottle of "Sneaky Pete" in his hand, after a disturbance had been reported.

King gave his address as 810 5th st. nw., the Gospel Mission, and his occupation as laborer.

Army Is Only Strong Enough To Start New One, Clark Says

NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (U.P.)—Gen. Mark W. Clark, chief of Army Field Forces, warned tonight that the regular United States Army is so depleted it is barely strong enough to serve as a base on which to build new units.

Clark, who spoke at the final session of the nineteenth annual New York Herald Tribune Forum, promised, however, that "in a shorter time than ever before we will have an Army that will have the know-how and the will to fight."

"The depletion of our regular Army strength has progressed to an extent which leaves it barely capable of serving as a mobilization base upon which to build new units and reconstitute a general reserve sufficient to implement our war plans should combat be forced upon us by new acts of aggression," said Clark.

Thomas K. Fialetter, Secretary of the Air Force, told the forum that if the United States had not had its strategic air power "we might well have been in World War III by now."

"As long as the nations stay heavily armed the strategic air attack—our ability to strike with great atomic power at the very centers of an aggressor nation—will be the greatest force for peace in the whole western world."

Joseph C. Grew, former U. S. Ambassador to Japan and chairman of the National Committee for a Free Europe, said the Iron Curtain some day will disintegrate because "houses built on sand cannot permanently endure."

"Now when that eventua' process of disintegration of the Iron Curtain comes to a head—it may be five, it may be 50 years—a political vacuum, perhaps political chaos, may and presumably will occur," Grew said. "Unless we look forward to that day and prepare for it, one form of tyranny may well replace another, just as Stalin replaced Hitler."

W. Stuart Symington, chairman of the National Security Resources Board, warned that unless this nation grows and stays strong there will be a war "and America is sure to lose it."

Symington said the Korean war has taught the United States that "strength for ourselves and our allies is by far the best way to avoid war."

Hugh H. Clegg, assistant director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, urged the American people not to take into their own hands the problems of subversive activities.

Korea acted as an international alarm clock, "waking up America to the dangers that faced her," Marguerite Higgins told the forum. Miss Higgins, war correspondent of the Herald Tribune, asked:

"What good would it do to win in Korea if we lost Indo-China? The United States must be ready in Indo-China also to give all-out aid against the Communists even if it requires the use of American and other United Nations troops."

"We cannot," Miss Higgins added, "stiffen the European front at the expense of Asia. If we cede Asia, we will ultimately lose Europe anyway."

Truman Urges Guard Heads to Back UMT

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

President Truman yesterday asked National Guard officers of the 48 States to "put everything you have" behind adoption of universal military training for the Nation's youth.

The Guardsmen, meeting at the Mayflower Hotel in the seventy-second annual conference of the National Guard Association, were more than ready to go along with the President. Soon after he left they adopted unanimously a resolution, already prepared by their resolutions committee, which left their officers free to press for UMT in whatever form appeared best suited to the changing times. Resolutions adopted at previous conferences instructed the association's officers to support specific forms of universal training.

Mr. Truman recalled that ever since he became a member of Congress in 1935 he had advocated UMT and that, since becoming President in 1945, he had asked Congress eight times for a training program.

"You know," he said, "one of the most disgraceful things that ever happened to this country was to find that 34 percent of the young men and young women were not physically and mentally fit to serve the country.

"Now that is a disgrace to the richest Nation in the world, with all the medical knowledge that is supposed to exist in the world.

"A universal training program would eradicate that situation, and I hope that you gentlemen, my friends in the National Guard, will put everything you have behind the idea of a training program for the youth of this country, to make them able to defend their country when it is necessary."

The President said he did not believe there would have been a "Korean incident" if "some people had not thought that we were too proud to fight." On the contrary, he declared, "we will fight for the right every time."

Recalling his own long membership in the National Guard of Missouri, Mr. Truman said he regarded his certificate as corporal, issued to him nearly 45 years ago, "one of the best certificates that I have had in my whole life." In 1905, he said, each member of his battery had to contribute 25 cents on drill nights in contrast to the drill pay now received by Guardsmen, which "is right and as it should be."

At the afternoon session of the conference, Gen. Mark W. Clark, commanding Army Field Forces, said National Guard ground units now in training should not be kept in Federal service unless demanded by progress of the cold war. He indicated that Regular Army units now being formed should take their places when trained.

Enemy Is 'Ruthless' and 'Lies'

The Korean war has taught, Clark said, that the enemy is "a ruthless enemy, who lies, cheats, murders prisoners and wounded on the battlefield and conforms to none of the rules of land warfare." This enemy, he declared, "came to power through force and understands only force" and must be confronted "with some of those blue chips in the form of divisions, ships and airplanes."

He recalled the manner in which the Army was stripped of trained men everywhere to meet the crisis in Korea, but said units which were decimated left behind cadres to train recruits and reconstitute themselves. Nine replacement centers are now being activated, he said, to train replacements and men for new units.

In addition to its resolution on universal military training, the conference adopted two which sought to preserve the integrity of the National Guard during periods of military expansion. These resolutions urged that the Guard be called to active duty first among civilian components and recommended legislation which would prevent members of the Guard being drafted or called to active duty as individuals rather than with their units.

Air Wing Liquidation Hit

Still another resolution criticized liquidation of the 12 National Guard air wings as "destruction of proven entities in favor of a scattered, illogical pattern of organization." The same resolution recommended formation of air divisions in the Guard.

Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, adjutant general of Maryland and a Guardsman for nearly 50 years, received the association's Distinguished Service Medal for his contributions as an officer and soldier and as a member of the association. The medal, presented yesterday for the first time, was pinned on Reckord's chest by Maj. Gen. Ellard A. Walsh, association president.

The association entered the current squabble over use of the United Nations flag by unanimously adopting a resolution demanding that it not be displayed in a Position "superior or equal to" that of the United States flag. Maj. Gen. Sumter L. Lowry of Florida, sommander of the Fifty-first Infantry Division (Florida and South Carolina) introduced the resolution.

Lowry said there existed a "conspiracy to lower our flag and put a world flag in its place." He termed an incident at Arlington Cemetery Tuesday, when the UN flag was flown alone over the amphitheater as "an insult to every man who has given his life for his country."

General Reckford offered an amendment urging that the United States flag be "restored to its rightful and proper place at Arlington," but withdrew it when it was explained that the flag already had been replaced.

Eight members of the association's executive council were elected as the session neared its close. They were Maj. Gens. William H. Harrison, jr., Massachusetts; Carl F. Hausauer, New York; Raymond H. Fleming, Louisiana, and George C. Finch, Georgia; Brig. Gens. Charles G. Sage, New Mexico; Leonard E. Thomas, California, and Frank Allen, Illinois; and Lieut. Col. Robert L. Gould, Maryland.

NICE, France, Oct. 25 (AP)—Movie actor Errol Flynn was bedfast aboard his honeymoon yacht in Villefranche Harbor today with a back injury reported suffered in a fall on a rain-drenched dock. Flynn's bride of three days, the former Patrice Wymore of Salina, Kans., attended him.

Guard Air and Ground Units Will Get Combined Training

Combined training of National Guard air and ground units now in Federal service was announced yesterday by the Defense Department, but Army Field Forces looks on the project with some skepticism.

The announcement said these Guard units would be given "intensive" training as "air-ground combat teams" and eventually would work together in maneuvers where there would be "extensive Army and Air Force participation." Four Guard infantry divisions on active duty have been teamed up with four Guard fighter groups stationed at nearby fields for joint training.

Planning and operation of the program are in the hands jointly of Gen. Mark W. Clark, commanding Army Field Forces, and Lieut. Gen. John K. Cannon, commanding the Tactical Air Command. Clark's headquarters are at Fort Monroe, Va., while Cannon's are at Langley Field, just a few miles away.

Speaking to the National Guard Association yesterday at the Mayflower Hotel, Clark spoke of these plans and said much progress had been made in cooperating with Air Force tactical headquarters. But he said frankly that "we are not entirely satisfied with the set-up at present." Ground forces, he declared, "feel that we should have a voice in stating the military characteristics" of supporting aviation. He said that on the basis of experience in Korea, "we are not sure the jet airplane is the kind that can give us the support we need."

Clark said another weakness of air support as now practiced was lack of proper control by ground commanders. He recommended establishment of forward control parties, either ground or air personnel, to operate with units in battle and call for air support.

Under the program announced yesterday, the Forty-Third Infantry Division, composed of New England Guardsmen, will cooperate with the 136th Fighter Group. The Forty-Third Division is stationed at Camp Pickett, Va., and the 136th Fighter Group is at Langley Field.

The announcement said also that National Guard utility flights would be used to tow targets for Guard antiaircraft units and Guard tactical reconnaissance squadrons would cooperate with Guard ground units on maneuvers

Puller on List Of 7 Marines To Be Generals

"Chesty" Puller, the Marine colonel who emerges as one of the most aggressive and colorful leaders in the Korean war, is going to be made a brigadier general.

The Marine Corps announced yesterday that President Truman has approved the promotion of seven of its colonels, including Puller, to the temporary rank of brigadier general. The promotions will be made when vacancies occur.

Col. Lewis Burwell Puller—to give him his full name—has commanded the First Marine regiment in Korea. Gen. Douglas MacArthur personally awarded him the silver star last month. Born in West Point, Va., Puller considers Saluda, Va., as his present home town.

Another Korean fighter, Col. Gregon Albert Williams, chief of staff of the First Marine Division, also was on the promotion list. duty in the United States.

The other five are:

Col. James Profit Riseley, a native of Shandaken, N. Y., who is now professor of naval science at Princeton University.

Col. Frank Hamilton Lamson-Scribner, assistant director of Marine aviation at Marine Corps headquarters in Washington. He resides at Alexandria and his father, Allen Lamson-Scribner lives at Colonial Beach, Va.

Col. William John Scheyer, assistant director of the personnel department at Marine Corps headquarters in Washington. A native of Dunkirk, N. Y., he now resides at Arlington, Va.

Col. Albert Dustin Cooley, director of the junior school at the Marine Corps education center, Quantico, Va. He was born at Billings, Mont.

Col. Robert Osborne Bare, chief of staff of the Marine education center at Quantico.

Worker Shift 'Plan' Grist for Reds' Mill

By Russell Hill

BERLIN, Oct. 25 (NYHT)—A fumble in Washington has provided the Communist newspapers here with some of the best propaganda ammunition they have had in many a week.

They are playing up the "Weiss Plan," which, they say—quoting such respectable sources as high-ranking Washington officials of the Economic Cooperation Administration—calls for the transfer to the West, of 120,000 of Berlin's skilled workers with their equipment.

Officials here, bewildered by a story that seems to make them responsible for a plan that runs directly counter to their policy, have had to put in a lot of time in the last couple of days reassuring editors of western Berlin newspapers. The eastern Berlin editors didn't bother calling in—they just gleefully hopped on the story.

There is a "Weiss Plan." It is a report by William Weiss, chief of the economics division here, calling for increased investment in Berlin to raise production and reduce unemployment. It even mentions the figure of 120,000, but that is the amount by which it is believed Berlin's present unemployment figure of 290,000 can be reduced in 18 months.

As far as people here can figure it out, what must have happened is that this unemployment figure was linked with a paragraph in Weiss' report saying that consideration was given moving out a small number of Berliners.

The fact is that Berliners, whether they are employed or not, like it here. During five tough years they have refused to leave their city. They are proud of their skilled industry and any idea that the Americans plan to move them and their machines away could destroy the feeling of confidence that has grown up here.

The Russians have in the past moved both machines and skilled workers from Berlin and eastern Germany to the Soviet Union.

Keller Named Marshall Aide On Missiles

By the United Press

Defense Secretary George C. Marshall yesterday appointed K. T. Keller, president of the Chrysler Corporation, to a new top-level post as director of guided missiles for the armed forces.

The 64-year-old Detroit industrialist will serve in a part-time capacity as a special adviser to Marshall in coordinating all military activities connected with research, development and production of guided missiles.

Keller is expected to retain his private job as Chrysler president. He may serve as many industrial executives did in World War II—as a "dollar-a-year" man.

Marshall said Keller will keep in close touch with the Armed Forces Research and Development Board, which is responsible for perfecting new weapons, and with the Munitions Board, which is responsible for producing them.

A military officer will be appointed later as deputy to Keller, and will devote full time to coordination of the kuided missiles program.

Keller, a native of Mount Joy, Pa., started his career as a machineshop apprentice with Westinghouse Electric Co., and rose to assistant superintendent of that firm's automobile engine department.

Donohue to Talk

flying personnel and submarines get additional pay ranging from $30 to $120 a month depending on rank.

Army officers who have returned from Korea say the men at the front are bitter over the fact the "fly-boys" are getting the extra pay while facing little opposition and they—taking the bulk of the casualties—don't even get the $10 extra monthly allowed combat infantrymen during World War II.

Officials who concede the justice of the gripes point to the fact that the problem is a complicated one. In the Navy, for example, should submarine crews and pilots only get the hazard pay, while minesweeper crews bore the brunt of the casualties in Korea? The law, they note, permits President Truman to suspend any type of hazard pay—though not extend it—in time of war.

And though it won't do the Korean veterans any good, it seems certain that the agitation over the matter will bring about a thorough review of the whole question. A Department of Defense spokesman said the problem was under "very active study." Perhaps the combat doughfoot will get a better break if there's a "next time."

Chaplains Plan Youth Society For Services

Plans for a youth religious organization to be launched among all branches of the Armed Forces were announced yesterday.

T. A. Rymer, director of the General Commission on Chaplains, said the project would be sponsored by the 47 Protestant denominations of the commission. Its aim will be to help the younger men get together at posts and on ships in a spirit of Christian fellowship, as in many church youth programs, he said.

Other items discussed at a meeting of the commission here yesterday included how to recruit more clergymen for the services, and how the various denominations could better support their chaplains. Both matters were referred to the denominations for further study.

Seventy-five persons attended the semiannual meeting at commission headquarters, 122 Maryland ave. ne. The commission acts as a liaison between chaplains and the Armed Forces.

Nagley to Address Engineers Tonight

Forrest R. Nagley, materials engineer of the Bureau of Ships, Navy Department, is scheduled to speak tonight at a meeting of the Applied Mechanics—Machine Design Division, American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

The meeting, open to the public, will begin at 8 p. m., at the Potomac Electric Power Company auditorium, 10th and E sts. nw. Nagley's topic is "Some Observations on the Engineering Properties of Metallic and Ceramic Coatings on Metals."

'Sightless' Beggar Finds Justice Is Not Blind

BALTIMORE, Oct. 25 (AP).—Patrolman James T. Middleton watched closely as the blind beggar, wearing dark glasses, tapped his way down the main drag with a white cane.

Coins tinkled into the beggar's tin cup like rain on a tin roof—$3.50 in one block. He steered around a group of pedestrians.

Middleton slipped up behind him and tapped him on the shoulder.

"Yes, sir?" the blind man asked.

"Now how," the policeman asked, "did you know I was a man?"

John Grimm, 35, without his glasses, his white cane and his tin cup, went to jail today when he could not pay a $51.45 fine for begging.

Job Placement Service Is Asked For Paraplegics

By the United Press

A committee yesterday urged President Truman to set up an effective job placement service for paraplegic veterans, whose hospitalization is "often unnecessarily prolonged."

The committee, which was set up by the President to study veterans medical services, said in a report that "in most instances" patients in veterans hospitals receive better care than those in other institutions.

It said it found one hospital in which 40 paraplegics could have been discharged within 30 days "if an effective job placement service were available." They said the Government would have saved $200,000 a year if the men had been discharged—not counting the "spiritual" benefits to the patients themselves.

Millions of British Incomes Rise; Millionaires Disappear

LONDON, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—World War II and five years of socialism have sounded the death knell of British millionaires.

But they also have done some other very startling things to the British income structure—commonly called leveling off.

Elimination of earned-income millionaires has been widely publicized. But for every thousand persons with high incomes who have been drastically cut, there are millions whose incomes have been raised to levels where they now pay income taxes.

The annual report of the commissioners of His Majesty's inland revenue, just published, is filled with dry looking statistics. But careful study of it discloses what the war and socialism have brought to the British Isles.

The most striking figure is that the number of persons with more than 6000 pounds ($16,000) a year left after income taxes is only 86 compared with 6560 in 1938-39.

But the report also shows these following changes:

1. Today with very high tax rates there are 20,750,000 Britons who earn enough money to pay income taxes. In 1938-39 with much lower tax rates there were only 9,800,000 persons paying income taxes although the exemption limit then was only 125 pounds ($350) compared with 135 pounds ($378) today.

2. Despite the increase in taxpayers, 20,316,000 of them have only between £135 and £1000 ($378 and $2800) left as net yearly income after taxes. In 1938-39 before the war there were less than half that many people in that group—9,585,000.

3. The number of people in the £135 to £150 ($378 to $420) net annual income group has decreased by more than one half.

4. Those in the £150 to £250 ($420 to $700) net annual income group has almost doubled.

5. Those retaining a net annual income of between £250 and £500 ($700 and $1400) has more than quadrupled from 1,940,000 in 1938 to 9,152,000 in 1948-49.

6. Even the £500 to £1000 ($1400 to $2800) group has tripled and the £1000 to £2000 ($2800 to $5600) net income group has more than doubled.

7. In Britain a net annual income these days of £2000 to £4000 ($5600 to $11,200) is high. But the number of persons in that group has increased from 54,640 in 1938-39 to 79,650 in 1948-49.

8. The only casualties have been among persons retaining net incomes exceeding £4000 ($11,200) per year.

State Drops Charges in Baby's Death

A charge of murder against John C. Ferranto, 20-year-old Alexandria electrician, in the death of his 2½-year-old stepson was dropped yesterday in Alexandria Corporation Court where the trial was slated to begin.

Commonwealth's Attorney Howard W. Smith, jr., said a nolle prosse was entered because of insufficient evidence against Ferranto.

The boy, Donald Dee, died of abdominal hemorrhages resulting from rupture of the liver and spleen. Physicians testified at a pre-trial hearing that the injuries were the result of a beating.

Ferranto, who lives at 110 S. Fayette st., Alexandria, has steadfastly maintained that he was innocent.

Smith said he was making arrangements to release Mrs. Emma W. Jenkins, 49, housekeeper at the home, who has been held as a material witness in the case.

Cab Driver, Marine Held In Robbery

A Marine private and a Bethesda cab driver were held by the United States Commissioner yesterday in connection with the weekend robbery of Upton Perrell, 58, 1217 33d st. nw.

Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence held Pfc. Irving L. Hook, jr., 18, of Quantico, Va., under $1000 bond for action of the grand jury on a charge of robbery.

George W. Whalen, 25, Route 4, Rockville, Md. the cab driver, was held under $2500 bond, and his case was continued for hearing to November 1.

A 16-year-old boy, also involved in the alleged robbery, was turned over to Juvenile Court.

Police said the robbery grew out of an argument late Friday night between Perrell and Whalen about the fare from Bethesda to Georgetown.

The Marine grabbed Perrell back into the cab when he tried to leave in front of his home, police said, and Whalen took his wallet and $17.

Then followed a wild four-hour ride through Virginia, Perrell told police, with Hook holding a knife to Perrell's throat. Hook admitted his part in the incident but denied threatening Perrell with a knife, police said.

Perrell said he was let out of the cab early Saturday morning at 22d st. and Pennsylvania ave. and given a one-dollar bill and a car token.

The chief maintenance man at the Georgetown University Dental School, Perrell said he called Bethesda police and was referred by them to Washington.

Pre-Election Raiders Seize N. Y. Vagrants

NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (AP).—The Nation's biggest city cracked down on hoodlums today.

A hoodlum, by definition of its acting mayor, is anyone who might cause trouble in the locally red-hot election.

About 700 detectives threaded the city's by-ways, picking up petty crooks and tough guys in their hangouts. Police stations were crowded with grumbling bums. A special Magistrate's Court was set up to dispose of them.

The defendants were charged with vagrancy. The vagrancy law covers anyone without a visible, legal means of support.

Some men were picked up while playing cards, others for no apparent reason except that they had police records. Unless they can produce evidence of a legal occupation, they face fines or jail sentences.

During the day 232 persons were arrested. Twenty pleaded guilty but the rest elected to fight the charges.

The roundup was ordered by Acting Mayor Vincent Impellitteri, a Democrat running as an independent because he couldn't get the Democratic nomination. He said he had received "alarming reports" his opposition might resort to strong-arm tactics to intimidate voters before and on election day.

His recently appointed police commissioner, Thomas F. Murphy, who's been clearing the department of gambling graft charges, showed he meant business. Murphy said the roundup would continue "as long as I'm around. If the courts clear those arrested today, they'll be rearrested."

Then he took a badge away from an honorary deputy police commissioner—Generoso Pope, jr., publisher of Il Progresso Italo-Americano, Italian language newspaper.

Last night Impellitteri said Pope had told him the Democratic mayoralty candidate, Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora, was supported by gambler Frank Costello. Impellitteri charged Pecora was "nothing more than a respectable front for the lowest, vilest elements this town ever saw."

Pecora denied the charge and challenged Impellitteri to debate it in Times Square with him. The acting mayor refused, saying he wouldn't join in "any circus stunts." But Pecora was persistent. He announced he was hiring Town Hall on Saturday and would wait on the stage to debate Impellitteri.

Impellitteri quoted Pope as saying, "Costello told me he's going along with Pecora, so I am going along with Pecora, too."

Meanwhile, State Attorney General Nathaniel L. Goldstein called for 1000 special deputies to guard against election frauds. He appealed for volunteers on a "non-partisan, nonsalaried basis."

New York Case

Bribery 'Tap' Transcripts Are Missing

NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (AP).—Assistant District Attorney Julius A. Helfand said today that transcripts of wiretaps involving protection payments made to police by bookmakers have disappeared mysteriously from police department files.

Helfand indicated that the important evidence either had been suppressed or stolen. He said he was informed of the transcripts' disappearance in a letter written by Deputy Police Chief Inspector John J. Feretti, head of the Brooklyn police district in which they presumably were being kept.

Both Feretti and plainclothes Policeman John Gilgan, who made the wiretaps, were ordered to appear before the rackets-probing grand jury this afternoon to be questioned on the missing transcripts, Helfand declared.

The wiretaps were on telephone calls made from the Dugout Restaurant in Brooklyn, an alleged "pay-off" spot for the 20-million-dollar-a-year Harry Gross gambling empire. Gilgan made the "taps" on the order of the Brooklyn Supreme Court at the request of Helfand.

Gross, held in jail as a material witness, has admitted paying out a million dollars to cops in return for their protection.

Scores of police, many of high rank, have appeared before the jury as witnesses in the graft scandal investigation. Many hastily retired from the force either before or after testifying.

Feretti was assigned to his present post by Police Commissioner Thomas F. Murphy, recently named department head in a move to "clean up" the force.

Newsprint Price Increased by Fifth Canadian Concern

NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (AP). — A price increase of $10 a ton in newsprint spread today to Consolidated Paper Corp., second largest Canadian producers.

Consolidated became the fifth major Canadian newsprint company to boost prices in just under two weeks. Four of them are among the Dominion's top eight newsprint makers.

The increase brings the New York price to $110. The first of the hikes was announced October 13 by Powell River Paper Co. at Vancouver, British Columbia.

A spokesman for United States newspaper publishers, which get more than 80 percent of their newsprint from Canada, termed the increases "precipitate, excessive, unwarranted and ill-timed."

Cranston Williams, general manager of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, issued a statement of his views shortly after the second company, the big Abitibi Power & Paper Co., joined Powell River.

Now, Where Was I . ..

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 25 (U.P.)—Louis Garfinkle, author of the recently issued movie "You Can Beat the A-Bomb," today said that "this isn't exactly what I had in mind" as he drilled with other new Army recruits at Fort Lawton.

Blue Potatoes Feature N. J. GOP Race

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 25 (AP).—New Jersey Republicans are giving away blue—and what they call hot—potatoes.

The blue-dyed potatoes are part of the GOP congressional campaign effort to convince voters that the National Democratic Administration's surplus potato program is wasteful and extravagant.

The Republicans have been mailing and passing out the potatoes throughout the State as an exhibit of "the Truman Administration's 500 million dollar program of potato crop destruction."

Wrapped in cellophane, the blue potatoes carry a tag warning they are unfit for human consumption. The tag also informs the reader that:

"The Federal Government pays with your tax money $1.68 per 100 pounds of these potatoes. After dyeing them blue, it sells them back to the farmer who grew them for 1 cent per 100 pounds, for use as fertilizer."

It adds that "Joe Stalin also got 100 million bushels at that price—525 times less the price that you, the consumer, pay for potatoes."

So-called potato wagons—sound trucks manned by GOP women—have been traveling around the State to pass out the campaign material.

The GOP State Committee estimated that the Federal program has destroyed 40 percent of the potato crop in New Jersey this year.

Arlington Delegate Plan Given Setback

An Arlington County Board request for a special 1951 session of the Virginia General Assembly to consider giving Arlington two more Assembly Delegates received a dash of cold water yesterday.

State Senator Charles R. Fenwick, from Arlington, said Section 43 of the Virginia Constitution provides for reapportionment "in 1932 and every 10 years thereafter."

"From this it is obvious," Fenwick said, "that the reapportionment must take place in 1952," the year for the regular session of the General Assembly.

Request for the special session was made at the county board meeting last Saturday on Chairman Daniel A. Dugan's motion. It passed by a 3-2 margin.

Fenwick said Dugan "apparently . . . was so anxious to obtain publicity that he made no attempt to ascertain the true facts" before making his motion.

In asking the special session, the board majority declared Arlington population increased 137 percent from 1940-50, and requested the two delegates on that ground.

Dugan's motion also asked establishment of a new Congressional district in northern Virginia, embracing "no more than about 360,000 people" instead of the 506,000 in the present Eighth District.

Although reapportionment of State delegates can be ordered by the General Assembly, a reshuffling of congressional district lines must be done by Congress on petition of the State Legislature.

Expert Predicts Man Will Shrink to 2 Feet

TUCSON, Ariz., Oct. 25 (U.P.)—Man will shrink to a height of two feet in another one million years, a University of Arizona anthropologist said today. Dr. Bertram Kraus said he based his prediction on phenomena now occurring in the human body.

For example, he said, the human face is diminishing in size and modern man is losing his little toes and third molars. Future generations, he said, may not have either.

Slip Could Cost Dewey Victory

letter-writing episode, Dewey's plurality was expected to pull Hanley into the Senate. Now the odds are definitely in favor of 72-year-old Senator Herbert H. Lehman, despite another publicized "letter incident" involving him.

The Lehman letter, addressed to Alger Hiss more than two years ago, when Hiss had just been accued before the House Un-American Activities Committee of passing secret documents to Whittaker Chambers, was published by a New York newspaper at the height of the furore over the Hanley-Macy missive. Lehman had expressed sympathy for Hiss and belief in his loyalty.

Lehman Makes No Apology

Lehman said he had no apologies to make for the letter. He noted, however, that it was dated August 6, 1948, months before the former State Department official was indicted and convicted of perjury.

The letter may cost Lehman some votes, but few viewed it as a threat to his reelection. Dewey has refused to make political capital of it, saying: "Everyone knows he (Governor Lehman) is no Communist."

The Hanley letter incident, however, fanned continually by the Democrats, refuses to blow over.

Veteran New York political observers say it has already cost Dewey prestige and votes in Republican upstate, which Dewey usually carries heavily to offset New York City. They think many unhappy GOP voters will just stay home.

With registrations in the city and upstate at off-year record peaks, Dewey may come into New York with only a 500,000 upstate edge—Democrats say less. They say he would need 550,000 or more to offset Democratic margins in the city.

A Republican windfall in New York City proper, from a boomerang mayoralty contest, could still pull Dewey out of his predicament, so don't write him off.

"Democrats will get the surprise of their lives in the city," predicted Dewey aides.

The Democrats sprung the mayoralty election by making an Ambassador to Mexico out of Mayor Bill O'Dwyer. The idea was to turn out the big city vote, always het up by a mayor's race.

The play rebounded in Dewey's favor when Democrats promptly got in a row over the mayorship. Irked at the selection of Judge Ferdinand Pecora by the Democratic-Liberal Parties, Acting Mayor Vincent R. Impellitteri, city council president who felt he was entitled to the nomination, entered the race as an independent. Republicans named State Industrial Commissioner Edward Corsi. The leftwing American Labor Party made it a four-way mayor's contest by entering Paul L. Ross.

The Democratic hazard is that "bullet voting" for Impellitteri may take Democratic votes away from Lynch and Lehman as well as Pecora. In addition Ross, the ALP entry, may poll as high as 300,000 for mayor. The ALP has also entered candidates for Governor and Senator, costing Lynch and Lehman more potential support.

Straw Poll Result

The amazing independent strength of Impellitteri, known as "Impy" to his followers, might provide the city break that Dewey's waiting for.

A New York Daily News straw poll showed "Impy" leading the mayor's field with 52.5 percent compared to 29.1 percent for Pecora 13.8 percent for Corsi and 4.6 percent for Ross.

The poll also uncovered considerable apathy, with 8.5 percent of those queried undecided, many told the pollers that although they had registered they were going to sit out this election. Chief reason given: disguest with all politicians in this low ceiling race.

Whatever the outcome of the Statewide contest, the feeling among neutral observers here is that rightly or wrongly Dewey's national influence has been damaged by the Hanley affair. If he loses of course, Dewey may be in no position at the next Republican convention to push the boom he started for General Dwight D. Eisenhower. Needless to say, backers of Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) and other right wing GOP 1952 possibilities, are feeling no pain over the development.

The Dewey forces are now trying desperately to start a backfire against the Democratic charges.

Dewey, Hanley "Poor Men"

Dewey and Hanley are being pictured as poor men, living on their salaries — almost barefoot boys compared to the "rich Democrats," Lynch, Lehman and Flynn.

Dewey calls Hanley's impoverishment, after 25 years of public office, a "badge of honor," reflecting the kind of "honesty" he says Democrats can't understand.

"Poor Man" Hanley, accompanied by news cameramen, even made a trip downtown for what he said was his first peek at Wall Street in 40 years. He paused wistfully for photos in front of Lehman Bros., his opponent's former banking firm. He stopped also before the door of Middle States Petroleum Corp., of which Lynch is a director and trustee.

Dewey, running "mad but not scared" his supporters say, has developed another new wrinkle in campaigning—direct television interviews. An effective answer to the disappearance of the big political crowds of yesteryear, the programs go directly into New York City homes, and are kinescoped for rebroadcast up-State.

Dewey Sees Audience

The Governor sits easily on the edge of a desk in the studio and answers questions put to him by passersby on the street. The questioners can see Dewey through TV screens and he can see them.

Passing citizens query Dewey on everything from State politics to why he wears a mustache. One asked about his height. Dewey's reply: The Army average of 5 feet 8 inches.

Lynch recently has countered with more formal television appearances.

From the start, Dewey has been directing his fire at Bronx Leader Edward J. Flynn and what he calls the "Flynn-Tammany machine," accusing it of everything from engineering the "deal" whereby O'Dwyer became Ambassador, to "stealing" from the city schools.

Scorning to mention his own opponent, Lynch, by name, he hits instead at what he says are the "bosses" behind him.

"Nobody knows who Lynch is anyway," said a Dewey lieutenant. "Why should we give him any free advertising?"

Grand Jury Probe

A sensational Brooklyn grand jury investigation, involving alleged tie-ins between big gambling interests and New York policemen, provided a kick-off point for the man who rose to fame busting rackets.

Dewey made the most of it, charged connivance of political figures. He said Flynn candidates were responsible for New York's "reeking mess."

The former prosecutor thus was having the time of his life and definitely had the Democrats on the run up to the publication of the Hanley letter.

Since then he's been on the receiving end from Lynch and other Democratic candidates. Lynch called Dewey the "clumsiest liar in political history." Referring to the Governor as "Tom (Chase Bank) Dewey," he accused him of "buying off" Hanley and "throwing him to the dogs." He demanded Dewey's impeachment.

At the start of this week Lynch eased up a bit, after Democrats cautioned he might be overdoing a good thing. But he still found time to read the Hanley letter to most upstate audiences. At some points Lehman, who had been saying very little about the letter, joined up. After Lynch read the letter to an Oswego audience, Lehman told the crowd: "it is a startling situation."

Plainly Democrats intend to play the record until election day.

Early Action In Manpower Shortage Seen

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Robert C. Goodwin, director of manpower, yesterday said that the Government would have to take steps very soon to alleviate the manpower pinch in vital industries, but that manpower controls were not necessary at this time.

The Nation's No. 1 manpower headache is presently the problem of providing sufficient technical personnel for the expanding aviation industry, Goodwin said. The manpower shortage is also being felt in the electronics, shipbuilding, tank manufacturing and textile industries, he observed.

Right now, the Government is leaving the problems of recruiting sufficient manpower to the employers, but Uncle Sam is already thinking about the possibility of voluntary transfers of highly skilled workers to the vital plants that need them, Goodwin said. Such transfers, he pointed out, would have to be negotiated with labor and management organizations, and would have to protect the seniority, pensions and other rights of the transferred workers.

The manpower chief said that the shortage of needed workers has jumped from 13,000 just before the Korean war to 35,000, with more than half of the required men in the skilled crafts. He added that the impact of the Nation's huge defense program was just being felt. Greatest demand is for engineers, machinists, and instrument men.

Goodwin expressed the hope that Selective Service which has deferred 13,000 workers, would use the Labor Department's list of 80 "critical occupations" as a guide for occupational draft deferment. This list is already used by the Department of Defense, he said, in the deferment of members of the organized reserves and National Guard. Men in these jobs, he said, ought not be called into active service unless their special skills are utilized in the armed forces.

Bunche Given Professorship At Harvard

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 25 (AP). The first Negro professor in the 314-year-old history of Harvard College is Dr. Ralph J. Bunche.

The appointment of the United Nations official and Nobel peace prize winner as professor of government was announced by the university today.

Dr. Bunche, 46, is now senior director of the United Nations Trusteeship Council. His grandfather was a slave.

University Provost Paul H. Buck said Dr. Bunche's professorship "was voted by the corporation on January 16, 1950, and by the board of overseers on April 10, 1950."

He said Dr. Bunche accepted, but received leave of absence because of his present commitments in the United Nations.

The U. N. Palestine mediator was born in Detroit, the son of a barber. Orphaned at 14, he worked his way through school and then through the University of California at Los Angeles on athletic scholarships. He got his master's degree at Harvard in 1928 and received a doctorate there in 1934.

Asked about the appointment, Bunche said he previously had "indicated a willingness to accept such an appointment at a future date, bearing in mind, however, my deep interest in, my responsibilities to and my work with the United Nations." He declined further comment.

University officials gave no indication when his leave of absence would expire.

Fast Rezoning Work Protested by Citizens

The conversion of a triangle of land at 18th and Taylor sts. ne. from residential zone A to residential zone B prior to a public hearing on the matter by District Commissioners was the subject of a meeting of the Burroughs Citizen Association executive committee last night.

The association has protested the start of excavation and construction on the the plot before a hearing scheduled November 1. An association representative will protest the action at the hearing, a spokesman said last night.

The association also voted to give a life membership to Mrs. Eleanor Burroughs, widow of Dr. Robert N. Burroughs, who died last month while serving as president.

River Terrace

The River Terrace Citizens Association went on record last night as opposed to the raise from $10 to $15 in dues set by the Federation of Citizens Associations.

Meeting at River Terrace Episcopal Church, Anacostia ave. and Clay st. ne., the association appointed Mrs. Eva Manchester as chairman of its utilities committee.

In another resolution the District was asked to resurface Eads st. ne. from 34th to 36th sts.

Sixteenth St. Highlands

Harry M. Dangler was reelected president last night at a meeting of the Sixteenth Street Highlands Citizens Association. Other officers elected: Col. A. S. Goodyear, first vice president; Mrs. George H. Foster, second vice president; Edith L. Todd, secretary, and Ralph Cole, treasurer.

Joseph N. Todd and Frank C. Sakran were named delegates to the Federation of Citizens Associations.

In other business the association voted $10 for the fund to fight the raise in the gas rate and passed a motion to withdraw from the North Washington Council.

Murder Trial Starts in Ball Bat Slaying

Charlie H. (Three Finger) Brown, 55, went on trial yesterday in District Court on a first-degree murder charge in the ball-bat slaying of Raymond E. Lewis, a former flophouse employe.

The trial began before a 10-man, 2-woman jury with Prosecutor Cecil R. Heflin stating that the killing was the result of a long-time grudge.

Brown of 419 6th st. nw., was described by his lawyer, John M. Webster, as a "derelict from 9th st" who was drunk and under an insane compulsion when Lewis was killed.

The slaying occurred June 30 on the Mall grass near the Smithsonian Institution. When the body was found, Lewis' face was beaten to a pulp. As the coroner put it, Lewis died of multiple fractures of the face and a brain injury.

Introduced in evidence but not yet read to the jury was Brown's confession given to police shortly after the death. Police acknowledge that Brown had been drinking but said that he was not drunk when they interviewed him.

'Bravos' Greet Work of Symphony at Opening Concert

By Paul Hume

The National Symphany Orchestra closed its concert last night in a blaze of glorious sound.

It was the season's first program. The final work drew upon six added brass instruments, organ, piano, celeste, and the recorded song of a nightingale.

This is the recipe for Ottorino Respighi's Pines of Rome, a work heard on previous opening concerts by the National Symphony. Under Howard Mitchell, it won shouts of approval from the audience which rose to salute the conductor ot the opening of the new season.

Constitution Hall has heard many orchestras of national and international fame. It has seldom heard any tone or ploying to surpass the Respighi. It was far more than a matter of added sound. In it, Howard Mitchell achieved a delicacy of tone, sensitiveness of coloring and musical imagination that stands with his finest work.

The powerful score by Respighi gave the new concertmaster, Werner Lywen, a brief moment to show the beauty of his tone and style. It also proved that we have the finest horn section the orchestra has yet possessed, and the strings are capable of sustained playing of impressive quality.

Earlier we heard woodwinds consistently outshining their companions in music by Handel and Schumann. Handel opened the evening with the Royal Fireworks Music, arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty.

Guiomar Novaes, Brazil's contribution to the world's top artists, played the piano concerto of Schumann. She makes it a personal yet consummately artistic, vehicle. No shade of nuance escaped her, nor can we remember hearing the delicate phrases more beautifully rounded out. In the dialogue between piano and woodwinds in the second movement the evening had one of its happiest episodes.

In both Handel and the first symphony of Samuel Barber the orchestra showed good and weak moments. The strings quickly acquired the energy needed for proper bowing of Handel. But the trumpets, in rather unusual fashion, had trouble with several trying spots.

Barber's symphony has all the virtues of impetuous younger years. Its finest lines are as good as any of his later work. The padding is a little more obvious today than at first, but it is still a handsome achievement for a first symphony, and was properly on the opening night's program.

Remembering the brilliance of the Respighi, we look forward to a season of challenging concerts.

Convicts Tie Mailman, Take Auto

Boston. He saw a man going into his barn, and stopped to investigate.

Kilby said when he reached the barn, he saw the three others appear. "They made me get over in the front seat of the car, and took me to Culpeper," Kilby said.

He said that after the men left Culpeper, they noticed that the car was nearly out of gas. Two of the escapees got out of the car and kept Kilby with them at pistol point while the others went on to get gas and cigarettes. Kilby said they took $2 from him for the gas. He said he thought they got about five gallons.

The men returned in about 10 minutes and decided the back seat was in their way, Kilby said. He said they threw it from the car, and three of the prisoners rode in the back, lying on the floor of the car.

Kilby said the car turned off on Telegraph rd. at its intersection with Duke st. in Alexandria. Kilby said the men took him about 3 miles down the road, drove about ½ mile into deep woods, then bound his hands and feet, gagged him and made him lie on the ground. He said he heard the car drive off and some time later managed to free his bonds.

The men made several references to Alexandria and Washington and Kilby said he got the impression that one of those cities was their destination.

He said they left him near the Rose Hill Farm, saying "You know we'll have to split up here." But he said he thought all went off in his car.

The fifth escaped prisoner, Fultz, was arrested when the sheriff's posse was attracted to the Gwinn home by gunfire. Fultz had been shooting at a bird house nearby. When the posse advanced, he appeared at a second-story window and gave himself up.

McCallum told police officers the men approached the Gwinn home about dusk Tuesday. He said he was in back of the house shucking corn. He said he went up to meet them. They asked him if he had seen an escaped convict around.

McCallum said that even in the dim light he knew "I was talking to the escaped convicts."

Both Mr. and Mrs. Gwinn are in a Fredericksburg hospital, recovering from injuries sustained in a traffic accident September 19.

McCallum, who is 18, said a friend, Lloyd Dodson, 14, was staying with him when the men appeared. When they learned that no one else was around, they went into the house and "took over." The two youths cooked dinner at their orders.

McCallum said the men made an unsuccessful attempt to get a car from the nearby farm of Homer Brown. Alerted by radio warnings that the men were at large, Brown refused to answer his door when they approached his house. The men tried to start Brown's car, but failed in their attempt. They stole from it a half pint of whiskey, which they took back to the Gwinn house.

Early yesterday, McCallum said, four of the men left the house. Fultz remained. When he was apprehended by the posse, police said he had "been drinking but was not intoxicated."

Kilby said the men took between $25 and $30 of his money when they left him near Alexandria. He said all four were wearing khaki pants. One of the two white men, he said, wore a flight jacket with a fur collar; the other, a white shirt.

Kilby said one of the two Negroes looked "as if he hadn't shaved in a week or ten days" and was wearing a yellow jacket. The other had an oriental appearance, Kilby said, and wore his hair very long.

Police have identified the convicts as: Robert L. Miller, 21, white, serving seven years for grand larceny and escape from a road camp; Ernest A. Waldron, 2?, white, four years for forgery; Walter W. Blair, 23, Negro, serving 16 years for robbery and Matthew Riddick, 26, Negro, serving 12 years for robbery.

Fultz, the fifth man, is 22 and was serving six years for housebreaking.

The two convicts from Goochland were identified by police as Richard Poteet, 24, serving 10½ years, and James Zollo, 22, serving 25 years.

Siddons Put On D. C. Jury Commission

Frederick P. H. Siddons, vice president of the American Security & Trust Co., was appointed yesterday to the jury commission of the District of Columbia.

The appointment was made by the judges of District Court meeting in general term. Siddons replaces the late Vincent Saccardi, who died October 22.

Siddons, 54, has long been prominent in civic activities. He is former president of the Board of Trade, trustee of the Washington Better Business Bureau, and is treasurer of the Washington Self Help Exchange among his other activities.

A native of Washington and graduate of Western High School, Siddons resides with his wife at 5905 33d st. nw.

Dewey And Luciano

It is high time that someone spiked for good the canard that Charles "Lucky" Luciano, vice king, narcotics lord and reputed head of the Mafia who was deported to Italy in 1946, rendered the United States any service during World War II. Representative Walter A. Lynch, Democratic candidate for Governor of New York, has dragged the commutation of Luciano's prison sentence into the campaign and has threatened to give "full details" unless Governor Dewey makes an explanation. If the fiction of war service on the part of Luciano did enter the commutation, it deserves to be exposed; but there is nothing so far to indicate any irregularity on the part of Governor Dewey in following the unanimous recommendation of the parole board.

In his commutation message Governor Dewey noted that Luciano had been approached for aid to the war effort while in prison but added: "The actual value of the information procured is not clear." That point can be answered definitely; it was nil. More than a year ago Mr. Edward T. Folliard of this newspaper made an exhaustive inquiry of the Navy to learn what, if anything, Luciano did to help in the Sicilian landings. Unquestionably naval intelligence did seek his cooperation. But there is nothing in Navy files anywhere to show that the slightest result came of it. The Navy ought to be cleared once and for all of the stigma of having in any way used, let-alone lionized, Luciano.

Where Governor Dewey was at fault, it seems to us, was in taking the recommendation of the parole board that Luciano be freed and deported. The effect of such deportations of undesirable aliens—and it is a regular practice—is to turn hardened criminals loose on the world. Actually the practice serves to dump such criminals on countries far less able to cope with them than is the United States. Any "saving" involved is likely to be false. Since his release, from all reports, Luciano has resumed his underworld activities in Sicily on a global scale, and there is nothing whatever in his record that can be classed as honorable.

Maritime Legality

Mr. Edward P. Troxell argues with a good deal of logic in the current Journal of the District Bar Association that the structure of the new Federal Maritime Board is illegal. In order to guard against favoritism, the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 provided that no person should hold office as a member of the old Maritime Commission who had been actively associated with shipping interests during the previous three years. The reorganization plan abolishing the commission did not expressly negate this provision and, Mr. Troxell asserts, the President does not have power to amend substantive law. Moreover, the 1936 act stipulated that all awards of construction subsidies above 33 1-3 percent of the cost should have positive approval by four members of the Maritime Commission. The new Maritime Board consists of only three members.

The first point is pertinent because two of the three members of the Maritime Board have had active recent connections with the shipping industry. One member, Albert W. Gatov, before his appointment was president of the Pacific American Steamship Association. Another member, Robert W. Williams, was a maritime law specialist in Baltimore and represented several shipping companies. And although the influential post of general counsel technically did not come within the ban, the new counsel, Francis S. Walker, comes from a law firm that represented the American Merchant Marine Institute and himself represented the institute before committees of Congress.

Additionally, two members of a new three-man advisory committee of "disinterested public figures" to examine contracts for six passenger vessels let by the old Maritime Commission also have industry connections. Prof. Herbert W. Seward, the chairman, recently completed work for the Merchant Marine Institute; and the second member, R. E. Gillmor, is vice president of the Sperry Corp., a major supplier of marine equipment to shipyards and shipping companies. The contracts which these gentlemen are to examine are those criticized by the Comptroller General and the House Executive Expenditures Committee as involving excessive subsidies. It is interesting to note in this connection that the chairman of the new Maritime Board, Vice Admiral Edward L. Cochrane (retired), observed in a recent speech before the Propellor Club that the fact that the Government has taken over four of the six ships for defense use "should be some satisfaction to my predecessors on the Maritime Commission who approved their construction." This line of reasoning overlooks the salient point that the previous objection was not to construction of the vessels, but to the concealment of subsidy. In the same speech Admiral Cochrane spoke of "we of the industries," a reference which we hope was not a Freudian slip.

There is no cause for prejudgment merely because the new board is so heavily weighted with shipping industry alumni. But the responsibility is a heavy one, and the members themselves will have to prove that the setup is a workable one by their ability to distinguish the public interest from private interest.

French Poser

The French, who will have a key role in the new Atlantic system, have hitherto been very logical in their approach to European rearmament. Now they seem to have wandered somewhat afield. No continental army can exist and no use can be made of German troops, they say, without some kind of accompanying political organization for Europe. So the French may seek at the Saturday meeting of the defense chiefs to make the establishment of a European army, including the Germans, contingent upon the simultaneous setting up of a European parliament, the appointment of a European Minister of Defense, and the implementation of the Schuman Plan for a coal-steel pool under the same supranational authority.

These conditions, if they are such, are bound to complicate the proceedings of the defense chiefs of the Atlantic Alliance because the chiefs represent countries on both sides of the Atlantic. It is their task to put the finishing touches to a unitary organization of European defense sans politics; and time is of the essence. Moreover, there is no unanimity in Europe on a continental political organization. Outside of these considerations the French have put in a dilemma those who share the military chiefs' sense of urgency and at the same time appreciate the French sense of organization. It is for want of organization that there has hitherto been neither center nor authority in the alliance.

Ever since the mutual defense program was legislated, the military heads of all the Allied countries have been more or less marking time, creating little more than a facade of Atlantic organization. There was no real advance along the route of "mutuality of effort" till the aggression in Korea. All of a sudden the tocsin was sounded to come to grips with rearmament. What happened? In spite of French pleas, every ally, thinking only of its own national requirements, started a wild scramble for raw materials, bid up prices, and gratuitously got themselves landed on a rising spiral of parallel inflation. The spectacle looked like a preliminary victory for Stalin, rather than evidence of Atlantic preparedness.

What made matters worse for the French was the sight of Congress in full cry for the rearming of the Germans and the Spaniards as a necessary measure of American defense. The agitation ignored the Atlantic Alliance and almost left the Schuman Plan stranded. For the Germans, seeing big armament business ahead for the Ruhr, began to cool off in the Schuman Plan negotiations. All this is why the French see in the first pause in the crisis started over Korea a chance to return to what they consider basic forms of organization. They see a chance to use the alliance as an instrument for the creation of a new society for Europe which would inspire the people to take up arms in its defense.

The problem is to complete the alliance while giving every possible aid to the movement to integrate Europe. If a military alliance is all that is on our mind, then we shall be untrue to a deep impulse in Europe which we have hitherto applauded. Millions of Europeans see no point in fighting for an old order of embattled nation-states which has already brought on two world wars. Fortunately the reaction of Secretary Acheson yesterday was altogether constructive. He reaffirmed this country's support of the Schuman Plan as the only feasible means of bringing political health back to Franco-German relations. It remains for the Administration to make it clear during the present defense negotiations that no military arrangements will be tolerable which do not take the plan into account.

American Assembly

General Eisenhower's statement that he considers the new American Assembly project "the most important step I have taken as president of Columbia University" speaks well for the aim of this effort to focus enlightened thought on national problems. The plan is to bring together leaders of business, labor, politics, the professions and government in a series of conferences at the Harriman estate, given away for the purpose, in the Ramapo Hills north of New York City. In this atmosphere, it is hoped, conferees will be able to achieve some agreement on such questions as how large a military establishment the economy can support, what is the Government's responsibility to provide medical care, and the like. The virtue of the program is the fact that, although conferees will have skilled academic help for background facts, the actual discussions will be carried on by laymen with a wide variety of interests and representing many areas of the country. The results of the conferences will then be published, in the hope that the conferees may spread the results of the discussions.

There can never be too much effort to bring thorough nonpartisan exploration of grave national issues, to shed the light that now often is dissipated in the heat of partisan discussion. It is not to be expected that the groups will arrive at easy answers or even general agreement; but in any serious detached approach to these problems there should be a synthesis of ideas. These will be of general service in helping to create a more informed public opinion and a more intelligent functioning of the democratic process.

Al Jolson

The extraordinary thing about the career of Al Jolson, as we think about it, was his perennial popularity; for in hardly anything is the volatility of American taste more apparent than in the rise and decline of our professional comics. Early in the second decade of the century when Jolson was building a reputation in the Winter Garden reviews, there were perhaps a half dozen other comedians of his genre, most of them identified at one time or another with the Ziegfeld Follies, whose names were quite as famous as his own, but who are now almost wholly forgotten.

It is not enough to say that it was merely a matter of survival. Many of the great blackface comics of that era are, to be sure, long since dead, including Bert Williams, greatest of them all. But this does not explain why, with the notable exception of Jolson himself, the type had virtually disappeared from the stage and had found no other counterpart in Hollywood. Part of the answer is that from the beginning Jolson touched something permanent in the psychology of his audiences, and that he endeared himself to them by the very qualities that affronted the fastidious. One of these qualities was an exuberant sentimentality which has made two generations laugh and cry alternately. His end was in the same sharp contrast as his shows. A jest on his lips, and a sudden and familiar leave-taking.

But the beginning and the end of Jolson were in even sharper contrast. He was born in Russia, the Russia of the pogroms; and his family fled here from persecution, settling down in this city, where he was reared and educated. His last performance was in Korea, victim of an aggression which must have reminded him of his own childhood, and he overstrained his heart in the task of giving 42 shows to the American troops. Thus, in more ways than one, he came around full circle, leaving a memory of a tremendous vitality which was stilled only at the moment of death.

Milk Showdown

Health Officer Seckinger reportedly will tell the District Commissioners this morning that a milk shortage in Washington is imminent if the ban on imports of "outside" milk goes into effect next week. It is about time that the Commissioners listened to Dr. Seckinger on matters on which he is an authority. They already have overruled him on two points: first, his recommendation that chemical sterilization of farm utensils be accorded equal preference with the steam method, and second, that he determine when a milk shortage exists. The possibility of a shortage is all the more reason for ending the favoritism to one group of producers and opening the market to any milk that is safe and meets State and United States Public Health Service standards. If the Commissioners ignore Dr. Seckinger again, they will invite the charge that they are creating an artificial milk scarcity in the District.

Give Them A Chance

President Truman's mobilization director, W. Stuart Symington, is on firm ground in taking a stand against hasty imposition of direct price and wage controls before indirect inflation curbs have been given "any chance to work." It is not yet possible to estimate the cost of the defense program or gauge its effect on civilian industry. Not only will it be a good many months before the peak of defense spending is reached, the requirements of the program will change from time to time. Hence it is important to maintain a maximum amount of flexibility in the economic structure to minimize the inevitably disruptive effect of increased military demands on the civilian economy as well as to avoid needless restrictions on industry that might hamper production.

The opposition that has arisen to the indirect controls already imposed is also a warning against premature resort to more stringent direct controls. Administration of price and wage controls is a difficult business at best and effective enforcement is impossible without public support. That is another reason why it is essential to avoid resort to direct controls until less restrictive indirect controls, such as credit curbs, higher taxes, allocations and priorities have been given a fair trial.

As defense spending approaches peak level, it will doubtless be necessary to invoke selective controls over the prices of some commodities, and over wages in industries subject to price controls. Indeed, sweeping over-all controls will be essential if producers continue to raise prices and mounting living costs result in workers demanding and receiving higher wages. Mr. Symington's declaration does not preclude resort to such sweeping direct controls. In fact his assertion that "if everybody gets in and pitches we have a good chance to make indirect controls work" is equivalent to saying that unless producers, workers, and consumers exercise restraint, moderate, indirect controls will have to be followed by more stringent direct controls.

Al Jolson

And so Al Jolson is dead.

The shocking radio broadcast of that message recalled to my mind a wartime scene: 3500 sailors packed in an auditorium to greet Al. He flew across the continent for this performance, expecting some aid, but he was the whole show. For one hour and a half he kept the servicemen laughing and singing. His fatigue did not show in this performance. And when I told him another crowd was awaiting him, he carried on like a good soldier.

Of course he should not have made the trip to Korea—but the fact that we have such men as Al Jolson who think of others first makes this a great Nation. And what a glorious exit for a trouper to leave the stage when he had just completed one of his greatest missions!

Al Jolson should not be remembered as a great comedian or a "mammy" singer. He should be revered as a great citizen.

"Universal Service"

Your October 21 editorial, "Universal Service," in which you pointed out that the burden of recall to duty has fallen disproportionately on enlisted men and junior officers and further that most reserves did not anticipate this sort of limited emergency when they signed up, hit the nail on the head.

I believe that most reserve officers signed in order to retain their commissions in the event actual war occurred again. They did not expect to have to interrupt their civilian careers for a second time to engage in a "police action" or for partial peacetime mobilization.

It is also true, I believe, that the advantages of reserve activity accrued to the higher rank (officers who have not been recalled to active duty) for whom retirement benefits are a good deal more imminent and for whom mobilization assignments and two weeks active duty with pay were more frequently made available than for the junior officers who are bearing the brunt of the dislocation involved in recall to active duty.

It would seem to be in the interest of national defense to have as large a trained reserve as possible. Therefore, why not draft men of 18 or 19 before they have firm roots in civilian activity? Why not provide for officer candidate schools as an incentive to improve their morale and efficiency? At the end of their tour of duty let them be transferred to the reserves.

As a result the Nation will have a larger pool of trained manpower available and the present reserves will be permitted to continue their inactive duty training without interrupting their civilian careers (from which the Nation also benefits) unless a general war ensues.

Dual Schools

Your October 18 articles on Randy Hawkins and the proposed discussion by the District Board of Education of crowded Negro classes, the Sesquicentennial incident, and the Central High School cornerstone demonstrated, more vividly than any editorial, the evil impact of racial segregation in the District's public educational system.

The board won't provide first-grade education at Ludlow School for 6-year-old Randy (who is white) allegedly "because there aren't enough children in the area to justify a first grade at Ludlow." The nearest white school is many blocks away, across the heavy traffic of Massachusetts and Maryland aves. Because Randy is white, the board would not admit him either to Logan School which provides first-grade education two blocks from his home, or to Taylor elementary school across the street from his home. So racial discrimination has deprived Randy of first-grade education.

The board, meanwhile, "plans study of crowded Negro classes" where part-time schooling deprives many colored children of equal education, while "white buildings [are] used at below capacity."

The refusal to permit the Sesquicentennial cast to appear at Anacostia High School is compounded by the board's special committee recommending "a policy resolution . . . interpreting the . . . law to mean that mixed groups of whites and Negroes cannot appear in schools during school hours." If a law may be "interpreted" by a "policy resolution," should the interpretation be on which damages democracy and creates further international censure for us at a time when we need internal cohesion and the support of other nations to withstand the onslaught of totalitarian aggression?

Equally poor judgment was reflected in the removal of the Central High School cornerstone and its proposed gift to the eminent, but nevertheless private, alumni organization.

Clearly, the time has come to put an end to this enthronement of bias in the educational system of our Nation's Capital.

Henry L. Stimson

The death of Henry L. Stimson, bringing to a close a remarkable career in public life, will be mourned by the rank and file as well as the leaders of our country.

As Secretary of War and State, Mr. Stimson served the American people faithfully and courageously under both Democratic and Republican regimes, a feat which required sound integrity and stern adherence to duty.

His favorite quotations from the Book of Kings, "Let not him that buckleth on his armor boast himself as he that putteth it off," reveals a way of life predicated on reliability and love of truth and simplicity.

Mr. Stimson's remark, upon retiring as Secretary of War September 19, 1945, when he said, "My present horizon is limited to a long rest and then we will see what the Lord has in store for me," bears further witness that he acknowledged the leadership of God in his life. Letting God have His Way with our lives can and does result in splendid careers as exemplified in the brilliant leadership of Henry L. Stimson.

The commonalty are grateful for this statesman who placed duty and honesty above party line.

"The Woolly Pandit"

In your October 19 editorial "The Woolly Pandit," you resorted to a level of attack that is not worthy of The Washington Post. The writer of the editorial seems to me to be the "woolly one." Whatever Mr. Nehru's ideas, and I am not in a position to pass judgment upon them, the implication in your editorial that they are not worthy of consideration is to reveal either a tragic ignorance of the Asian situation or a childish peeve because our ideas are not accepted without debate.

We need India's good will as much as India needs ours. Can we not speak very frankly and still retain our mutual respect, without which there is no basis for world cooperation.

"Mr. Hoover's Speech"

It was certainly a shock to me to read your editorial of October 22, entitled "Mr. Hoover's Speech." Apparently everybody except the Editor of The Washington Post heard the repeated statements of officials of the Government at the time the Marshall Plan was inaugurated and many times since, that its justification for America was to strengthen the defense of western Europe against communism.

Your reliance in the editorial upon the language of the objectives of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948 is a little naive for an editorial staff on the Washington scene. Perhaps this particular editorial writer had been so much interested in the "humanitarian" objectives of the aid to Europe program that his eyes were closed to the self-interest objectives which were, in fact, also quite important to the American people. Europe was frequently referred to by Administration officials as America's first line of defense, or words to that effect.

Physicians Forum

Dr. Rand, who is president of the D. C. chapter of the National Physicians Forum has, in a letter published October 21, proclaimed that organization's support of socialized medicine.

The lay public is perhaps not well acquainted with this group to which only a very few of our American medical men belong. The National Physicians Forum has repeatedly indorsed such persons as Paul Robeson. It has campaigned for Henry Wallace and the Progressive Party. It has violently opposed any legislation intended to curb communism in the U. S. A. This organization deluges the medical profession with invitations to attend a meeting, usually called a "rally" in support of such characters as Paul Robeson or invites them to contribute to the Progressive Party.

Considering this background, it is not reasonable that the National Physicians Forum has the welfare of America and Americans in mind by its indorsement of socialized medicine.

Anacostia Exclusion

In the action of the Board of Education applauding the exclusion of the mixed cast of "Faith of Our Fathers" from the Anacostia High School, the community has witnessed an exhibition of the enslavement of mind and spirit to a mean and outdated prejudice. At a time when the educational systems of States nearby and farther south are yielding to the irresistible force of a democratic idealism, the majority of the Board of Education has hidden behind a "spirit" that never was in the law to defend: the refusal of the principal of the school to permit white and colored actors to appear on the stage of the auditorium. The question of intermingling of students was not involved.

In defense of this, the majority of the board has read into the law what never was intended and, indeed, has never before been claimed: that it is illegal for whites and Negroes to be present at the same time in a District public school during school hours. And as excuse for this interpretation, they have pleaded that the school principal dared not do otherwise, seeing that she felt intimidated by threats of violence by the students!

Even accepting the unproved hypothesis that such substantial threats were actually made, since when do the adolescent outbursts of high school students determine the policies of our schools? Why was there no public hearing on this important question?

Tensions Of Rearmament

By Malvina Lindsay

'Mature Mind' Therapy

THE PROSPECT of armed camp living is beginning to mean something more to Americans than changed surroundings and scarce goods. Human tensions are building up. And with them rises the need for a new "conquest of fear."

Parents of young children are reported among the most disturbed over what the future holds. Much of the recent search for "safe" rural or suburban retreats has come from those who "don't worry about ourselves, but about the children."

Parents also are concerned over what to tell children about a conflict and a threat of war that dominate headlines, radio, television. And how are they to rear children to be calm-nerved for the uncertain times ahead? This last question frequently comes up in the preliminary meetings being held over the Nation for the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth, scheduled for December.

Then there is the broken family situation caused by the Korean war and the draft. With 80 percent of the men in the armed forces under 25, anxious mothers and desolate young wives are keeping the Associated Services for the Armed Forces (successor to the USO) busy. Increasing numbers of servicemen's wives and children are following them to camp. Relatives have been thronging ports of embarkation.

OFTEN THOSE left behind are unprepared psychologically for this upset in their lives. No more than many of the youth being called to service do they understand the why and what of the present dilemma. There is much juvenile reaction: Why should we bother about what goes on in Korea? Why should our generation be picked on? Why hasn't my neighbor been called? Why don't the British do more?

Even higher taxes are beginning to cause tensions, and these are due to multiply once there is full realization of the cost of the defense program. Here again is found the childish belief that some superman or supermeasure can "get us out of this financial mess"—even save us from having to pay the piper for rearmament in the years ahead.

Working girls are being severely hit by the tensions of rearmament, it was reported by YWCA representatives at a recent national meeting of the organization's business, professional and industrial councils.

In many cases their marriage plans have been upset. Some see future chances for marriage diminishing if increasing numbers of young men are sent out of the country. Home burdens are falling heavier on young women as their brothers are drafted. Their educational plans are being changed. Some even face insecurity about jobs owing to shifts in industry.

ADJUSTMENT to the new way of life that has been thrust upon this country is difficult because peril is yet largely intangible. There is no frenzy of patriotism arising out of "hot" warfare. And, safely protected for so long by our oceans, we have no tradition of preparedness against international burglars.

Understanding of what is going on is the first step in overcoming the jitters many face in this grim era, say psychologists. That also applies to children. Those past 5 are the ones who begin to ask questions and to have a concern about death. Child training experts say their questions about war should be answered truthfully, yet as briefly and reassuringly as possible. As they see their older brothers being drafted, hear the constant talk about atom bombs, they are bound to be curious.

The need of a positive rather than a negative approach in dealing with their questions and fears is advised by Dr. Alice V. Keliher, professor of education at New York University. What we are standing for rather than what we are fighting against should be emphasized, she believes.

But the greatest danger children face is that of absorbing the anxieties and fears of their elders. Hence the biggest job of parents today, say psychologists, is to cultivate emotional stability. The British bombings, it was found, did not upset youngsters when their parents or those in charge of them remained calm and confident.

This points up the widespread need today for adults who will give courage and confidence, not only to disturbed children, but to the large number of emotionally unstable grownups being affected by the anxiety and uncertainty about them. In defense planning for volunteer activities along material lines, it would seem some effort would also be made to organize groups in every community who would study and seek to practice the therapy of the mature mind.

Wake Island

The correspondent in your issue of October 19, who expressed surprise that two men on an island in the Pacific should take it upon themselves to decide upon United States policy in Asia has been asleep longer than he suspects. Did not Hitler and Mussolini follow a similar procedure in their Brenner Pass meetings? And how about Winston Churchill and Franklin D. Roosevelt on a battleship in mid-Atlantic? Not to mention Tehran, Yalta, Potsdam, etc. since time immemorial.

Boston. He saw a man going into his barn, and stopped to investigate.

Kilby said when he reached the barn, he saw the three others appear. "They made me get over in the front seat of the car, and took me to Culpeper," Kilby said.

He said that after the men left Culpeper, they noticed that the car was nearly out of gas. Two of the escapees got out of the car and kept Kilby with them at pistol point while the others went on to get gas and cigarettes. Kilby said they took $2 from him for the gas. He said he thought they got about five gallons.

The men returned in about 10 minutes and decided the back seat was in their way, Kilby said. He said they threw it from the car, and three of the prisoners rode in the back, lying on the floor of the car.

Kilby said the car turned off on Telegraph rd. at its intersection with Duke st. in Alexandria. Kilby said the men took him about 3 miles down the road, drove about ½ mile into deep woods, then bound his hands and feet, gagged him and made him lie on the ground. He said he heard the car drive off and some time later managed to free his bonds.

The men made several references to Alexandria and Washington and Kilby said he got the impression that one of those cities was their destination.

He said they left him near the Rose Hill Farm, saying "You know we'll have to split up here." But he said he thought all went off in his car.

The fifth escaped prisoner, Fultz, was arrested when the sheriff's posse was attracted to the Gwinn home by gunfire. Fultz had been shooting at a bird house nearby. When the posse advanced, he appeared at a second-story window and gave himself up.

McCallum told police officers the men approached the Gwinn home about dusk Tuesday. He said he was in back of the house shucking corn. He said he went up to meet them. They asked him if he had seen an escaped convict around.

McCallum said that even in the dim light he knew "I was talking to the escaped convicts."

Both Mr. and Mrs. Gwinn are in a Fredericksburg hospital, recovering from injuries sustained in a traffic accident September 19.

McCallum, who is 18, said a friend, Lloyd Dodson, 14, was staying with him when the men appeared. When they learned that no one else was around, they went into the house and "took over." The two youths cooked dinner at their orders.

McCallum said the men made an unsuccessful attempt to get a car from the nearby farm of Homer Brown. Alerted by radio warnings that the men were at large, Brown refused to answer his door when they approached his house. The men tried to start Brown's car, but failed in their attempt. They stole from it a half pint of whiskey, which they took back to the Gwinn house.

Early yesterday, McCallum said, four of the men left the house. Fultz remained. When he was apprehended by the posse, police said he had "been drinking but was not intoxicated."

Kilby said the men took between $25 and $30 of his money when they left him near Alexandria. He said all four were wearing khaki pants. One of the two white men, he said, wore a flight jacket with a fur collar; the other, a white shirt.

Kilby said one of the two Negroes looked "as if he hadn't shaved in a week or ten days" and was wearing a yellow jacket. The other had an oriental appearance, Kilby said, and wore his hair very long.

Police have identified the convicts as: Robert L. Miller, 21, white, serving seven years for grand larceny and escape from a road camp; Ernest A. Waldron, 25, white, four years for forgery; Walter W. Blair, 23, Negro, serving 16 years for robbery and Matthew Riddick, 26, Negro, serving 12 years for robbery.

Fultz, the fifth man, is 22 and was serving six years for housebreaking.

The two convicts from Geochland were identified by police as Richard Poteet, 24, serving 10½ years, and James Zollo, 22, serving 25 years.

Siddons Put On D. C. Jury Commission

Frederick P. H. Siddons, vice president of the American Security & Trust Co., was appointed yesterday to the jury commission of the District of Columbia.

The appointment was made by the judges of District Court meeting in general term. Siddons replaces the late Vincent Saccardi, who died October 22.

Siddons, 54, has long been prominent in civic activities. He is former president of the Board of Trade, trustee of the Washington Better Business Bureau, and is treasurer of the Washington Self Help Exchange among his other activities.

A native of Washington and graduate of Western High School, Siddons resides with his wife at 5905 33d st. nw.

Dewey And Luciano

It is high time that someone spiked for good the canard that Charles "Lucky" Luciano, vice king, narcotics lord and reputed head of the Mafia who was deported to Italy in 1946, rendered the United States any service during World War II. Representative Walter A. Lynch, Democratic candidate for Governor of New York, has dragged the commutation of Luciano's prison sentence into the campaign and has threatened to give "full details" unless Governor Dewey makes an explanation. If the fiction of war service on the part of Luciano did enter the commutation, it deserves to be exposed; but there is nothing so far to indicate any irregularity on the part of Governor Dewey in following the unanimous recommendation of the parole board.

In his commutation message Governor Dewey noted that Luciano had been approached for aid to the war effort while in prison but added: "The actual value of the information procured is not clear." That point can be answered definitely; it was nil. More than a year ago Mr. Edward T. Folliard of this newspaper made an exhaustive inquiry of the Navy to learn what, if anything, Luciano did to help in the Sicilian landings. Unquestionably naval intelligence did seek his cooperation. But there is nothing in Navy files anywhere to show that the slightest result came of it. The Navy ought to be cleared once and for all of the stigma of having in any way used, let-alone lionized, Luciano.

Where Governor Dewey was at fault, it seems to us, was in taking the recommendation of the parole board that Luciano be freed and deported. The effect of such deportations of undesirable aliens—and it is a regular practice—is to turn hardened criminals loose on the world. Actually the practice serves to dump such criminals on countries far less able to cope with them than is the United States. Any "saving" involved is likely to be false. Since his release, from all reports, Luciano has resumed his underworld activities in Sicily on a global scale, and there is nothing whatever in his record that can be classed as honorable.

Maritime Legality

Mr. Edward P. Troxell argues with a good deal of logic in the current Journal of the District Bar Association that the structure of the new Federal Maritime Board is illegal. In order to guard against favoritism, the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 provided that no person should hold office as a member of the old Maritime Commission who had been actively associated with shipping interests during the previous three years. The reorganization plan abolishing the commission did not expressly negate this provision and, Mr. Troxell asserts, the President does not have power to amend substantive law. Moreover, the 1936 act stipulated that all awards of construction subsidies above 33 1-3 percent of the cost should have positive approval by four members of the Maritime Commission. The new Maritime Board consists of only three members.

The first point is pertinent because two of the three members of the Maritime Board have had active recent connections with the shipping industry. One member, Albert W. Gatov, before his appointment was president of the Pacific American Steamship Association. Another member, Robert W. Williams, was a maritime law specialist in Baltimore and represented several shipping companies. And although the influential post of general counsel technically did not come within the ban, the new counsel, Francis S. Walker, comes from a law firm that represented the American Merchant Marine Institute and himself represented the institute before committees of Congress.

Additionally, two members of a new three-man advisory committee of "disinterested public figures" to examine contracts for six passenger vessels let by the old Maritime Commission also have industry connections. Prof. Herbert W. Seward, the chairman, recently completed work for the Merchant Marine Institute; and the second member, R. E. Gillmor, is vice president of the Sperry Corp., a major supplier of marine equipment to shipyards and shipping companies. The contracts which these gentlemen are to examine are those criticized by the Comptroller General and the House Executive Expenditures Committee as involving excessive subsidies. It is interesting to note in this connection that the chairman of the new Maritime Board, Vice Admiral Edward L. Cochrane (retired), observed in a recent speech before the Propellor Club that the fact that the Government has taken over four of the six ships for defense use "should be some satisfaction to my predecessors on the Maritime Commission who approved their construction." This line of reasoning overlooks the salient point that the previous objection was not to construction of the vessels, but to the concealment of subsidy. In the same speech Admiral Cochrane spoke of "we of the industries," a reference which we hope was not a Freudian slip.

There is no cause for prejudgment merely because the new board is so heavily weighted with shipping industry alumni. But the responsibility is a heavy one, and the members themselves will have to prove that the setup is a workable one by their ability to distinguish the public interest from private interest.

French Poser

The French, who will have a key role in the new Atlantic system, have hitherto been very logical in their approach to European rearmament. Now they seem to have wandered somewhat afield. No continental army can exist and no use can be made of German troops, they say, without some kind of accompanying political organization for Europe. So the French may seek at the Saturday meeting of the defense chiefs to make the establishment of a European army, including the Germans, contingent upon the simultaneous setting up of a European parliament, the appointment of a European Minister of Defense, and the implementation of the Schuman Plan for a coal-steel pool under the same supranational authority.

These conditions, if they are such, are bound to complicate the proceedings of the defense chiefs of the Atlantic Alliance because the chiefs represent countries on both sides of the Atlantic. It is their task to put the finishing touches to a unitary organization of European defense sans politics; and time is of the essence. Moreover, there is no unanimity in Europe on a continental political organization. Outside of these considerations the French have put in a dilemma those who share the military chiefs' sense of urgency and at the same time appreciate the French sense of organization. It is for want of organization that there has hitherto been neither center nor authority in the alliance.

Ever since the mutual defense program was legislated, the military heads of all the Allied countries have been more or less marking time, creating little more than a facade of Atlantic organization. There was no real advance along the route of "mutuality of effort" till the aggression in Korea. All of a sudden the tocsin was sounded to come to grips with rearmament. What happened? In spite of French pleas, every ally, thinking only of its own national requirements, started a wild scramble for raw materials, bid up prices, and gratuitously got themselves landed on a rising spiral of parallel inflation. The spectacle looked like a preliminary victory for Stalin, rather than evidence of Atlantic preparedness.

What made matters worse for the French was the sight of Congress in full cry for the rearming of the Germans and the Spaniards as a necessary measure of American defense. The agitation ignored the Atlantic Alliance and almost left the Schuman Plan stranded. For the Germans, seeing big armament business ahead for the Ruhr, began to cool off in the Schuman Plan negotiations. All this is why the French see in the first pause in the crisis started over Korea a chance to return to what they consider basic forms of organization. They see a chance to use the alliance as an instrument for the creation of a new society for Europe which would inspire the people to take up arms in its defense.

The problem is to complete the alliance while giving every possible aid to the movement to integrate Europe. If a military alliance is all that is on our mind, then we shall be untrue to a deep impulse in Europe which we have hitherto applauded. Millions of Europeans see no point in fighting for an old order of embattled nation-states which has already brought on two world wars. Fortunately the reaction of Secretary Acheson yesterday was altogether constructive. He reaffirmed this country's support of the Schuman Plan as the only feasible means of bringing political health back to Franco-German relations. It remains for the Administration to make it clear during the present defense negotiations that no military arrangements will be tolerable which do not take the plan into account.

American Assembly

General Eisenhower's statement that he considers the new American Assembly project "the most important step I have taken as president of Columbia University" speaks well for the aim of this effort to focus enlightened thought on national problems. The plan is to bring together leaders of business, labor, politics, the professions and government in a series of conferences at the Harriman estate, given away for the purpose, in the Ramapo Hills north of New York City. In this atmosphere, it is hoped, conferees will be able to achieve some agreement on such questions as how large a military establishment the economy can support, what is the Government's responsibility to provide medical care, and the like. The virtue of the program is the fact that, although conferees will have skilled academic help for background facts, the actual discussions will be carried on by laymen with a wide variety of interests and representing many areas of the country. The results of the conferences will then be published, in the hope that the conferees may spread the results of the discussions.

There can never be too much effort to bring thorough nonpartisan exploration of grave national issues, to shed the light that now often is dissipated in the heat of partisan discussion. It is not to be expected that the groups will arrive at easy answers or even general agreement; but in any serious detached approach to these problems there should be a synthesis of ideas. These will be of general service in helping to create a more informed public opinion and a more intelligent functioning of the democratic process.

Al Jolson

The extraordinary thing about the career of Al Jolson, as we think about it, was his perennial popularity; for in hardly anything is the volatility of American taste more apparent than in the rise and decline of our professional comics. Early in the second decade of the century when Jolson was building a reputation in the Winter Garden reviews, there were perhaps a half dozen other comedians of his genre, most of them identified at one time or another with the Ziegfeld Follies, whose names were quite as famous as his own, but who are now almost wholly forgotten.

It is not enough to say that it was merely a matter of survival. Many of the great blackface comics of that era are, to be sure, long since dead, including Bert Williams, greatest of them all. But this does not explain why, with the notable exception of Jolson himself, the type had virtually disappeared from the stage and had found no other counterpart in Hollywood. Part of the answer is that from the beginning Jolson touched something permanent in the psychology of his audiences, and that he endeared himself to them by the very qualities that affronted the fastidious. One of these qualities was an exuberant sentimentality which has made two generations laugh and cry alternately. His end was in the same sharp contrast as his shows. A jest on his lips, and a sudden and familiar leave-taking.

But the beginning and the end of Jolson were in even sharper contrast. He was born in Russia, the Russia of the pogroms; and his family fled here from persecution, settling down in this city, where he was reared and educated. His last performance was in Korea, victim of an aggression which must have reminded him of his own childhood, and he overstrained his heart in the task of giving 42 shows to the American troops. Thus, in more ways than one, he came around full circle, leaving a memory of a tremendous vitality which was stilled only at the moment of death.

Milk Showdown

Health Officer Seckinger reportedly will tell the District Commissioners this morning that a milk shortage in Washington is imminent if the ban on imports of "outside" milk goes into effect next week. It is about time that the Commissioners listened to Dr. Seckinger on matters on which he is an authority. They already have overruled him on two points: first, his recommendation that chemical sterilization of farm utensils be accorded equal preference with the steam method, and second, that he determine when a milk shortage exists. The possibility of a shortage is all the more reason for ending the favoritism to one group of producers and opening the market to any milk that is safe and meets State and United States Public Health Service standards. If the Commissioners ignore Dr. Seckinger again, they will invite the charge that they are creating an artificial milk scarcity in the District.

Give Them A Chance

President Truman's mobilization director, W. Stuart Symington, is on firm ground in taking a stand against hasty imposition of direct price and wage controls before indirect inflation curbs have been given "any chance to work." It is not yet possible to estimate the cost of the defense program or gauge its effect on civilian industry. Not only will it be a good many months before the peak of defense spending is reached, the requirements of the program will change from time to time. Hence it is important to maintain a maximum amount of flexibility in the economic structure to minimize the inevitably disruptive effect of increased military demands on the civilian economy as well as to avoid needless restrictions on industry that might hamper production.

The opposition that has arisen to the indirect controls already imposed is also a warning against premature resort to more stringent direct controls. Administration of price and wage controls is a difficult business at best and effective enforcement is impossible without public support. That is another reason why it is essential to avoid resort to direct controls until less restrictive indirect controls, such as credit curbs, higher taxes, allocations and priorities have been given a fair trial.

As defense spending approaches peak level, it will doubtless be necessary to invoke selective controls over the prices of some commodities, and over wages in industries subject to price controls. Indeed, sweeping over-all controls will be essential if producers continue to raise prices and mounting living costs result in workers demanding and receiving higher wages. Mr. Symington's declaration does not preclude resort to such sweeping direct controls. In fact his assertion that "if everybody gets in and pitches we have a good chance to make indirect controls work" is equivalent to saying that unless producers, workers, and consumers exercise restraint, moderate, indirect controls will have to be followed by more stringent direct controls.

Al Jolson

And so Al Jolson is dead.

The shocking radio broadcast of that message recalled to my mind a wartime scene: 3500 sailors packed in an auditorium to greet Al. He flew across the continent for this performance, expecting some aid, but he was the whole show. For one hour and a half he kept the servicemen laughing and singing. His fatigue did not show in this performance. And when I told him another crowd was awaiting him, he carried on like a good soldier.

Of course he should not have made the trip to Korea—but the fact that we have such men as Al Jolson who think of others first makes this a great Nation. And what a glorious exit for a trouper to leave the stage when he had just completed one of his greatest missions!

Al Jolson should not be remembered as a great comedian or a "mammy" singer. He should be revered as a great citizen.

"Universal Service"

Your October 21 editorial, "Universal Service," in which you pointed out that the burden of recall to duty has fallen disproportionately on enlisted men and junior officers and further that most reserves did not anticipate this sort of limited emergency when they signed up, hit the nail on the head.

I believe that most reserve officers signed in order to retain their commissions in the event actual war occurred again. They did not expect to have to interrupt their civilian careers for a second time to engage in a "police action" or for partial peacetime mobilization.

It is also true, I believe, that the advantages of reserve activity accrued to the higher rank (officers who have not been recalled to active duty) for whom retirement benefits are a good deal more imminent and for whom mobilization assignments and two weeks active duty with pay were more frequently made available than for the junior officers who are bearing the brunt of the dislocation involved in recall to active duty.

It would seem to be in the interest of national defense to have as large a trained reserve as possible. Therefore, why not draft men of 18 or 19 before they have firm roots in civilian activity? Why not provide for officer candidate schools as an incentive to improve their morale and efficiency? At the end of their tour of duty let them be transferred to the reserves.

As a result the Nation will have a larger pool of trained manpower available and the present reserves will be permitted to continue their inactive duty training without interrupting their civilian careers (from which the Nation also benefits) unless a general war ensues.

Dual Schools

Your October 18 articles on Randy Hawkins and the proposed discussion by the District Board of Education of crowded Negro classes, the Sesquicentennial incident, and the Central High School cornerstone demonstrated, more vividly than any editorial, the evil impact of racial segregation in the District's public educational system.

The board won't provide first-grade education at Ludlow School for 6-year-old Randy (who is white) allegedly "because there aren't enough children in the area to justify a first grade at Ludlow." The nearest white school is many blocks away, across the heavy traffic of Massachusetts and Maryland aves. Because Randy is white, the board would not admit him either to Logan School which provides first-grade education two blocks from his home, or to Taylor elementary school across the street from his home. So racial discrimination has deprived Randy of first-grade education.

The board, meanwhile, "plans study of crowded Negro classes" where part-time schooling deprives many colored children of equal education, while "white buildings [are] used at below capacity."

The refusal to permit the Sesquicentennial cast to appear at Anacostia High School is compounded by the board's special committee recommending "a policy resolution . . . interpreting the . . . law to mean that mixed groups of whites and Negroes cannot appear in schools during school hours." If a law may be "interpreted" by a "policy resolution," should the interpretation be on which damages democracy and creates further international censure for us at a time when we need internal cohesion and the support of other nations to withstand the onslaught of totalitarian aggression?

Equally poor judgment was reflected in the removal of the Central High School cornerstone and its proposed gift to the eminent, but nevertheless private, alumni organization.

Clearly, the time has come to put an end to this enthronement of bias in the educational system of our Nation's Capital.

Henry L. Stimson

The death of Henry L. Stimson, bringing to a close a remarkable career in public life, will be mourned by the rank and file as well as the leaders of our country.

As Secretary of War and State, Mr. Stimson served the American people faithfully and courageously under both Democratic and Republican regimes, a feat which required sound integrity and stern adherence to duty.

His favorite quotations from the Book of Kings, "Let not him that buckleth on his armor boast himself as he that putteth it off," reveals a way of life predicated on reliability and love of truth and simplicity.

Mr. Stimson's remark, upon retiring as Secretary of War September 19, 1945, when he said, "My present horizon is limited to a long rest and then we will see what the Lord has in store for me," bears further witness that he acknowledged the leadership of God in his life. Letting God have His Way with our lives can and does result in splendid careers as exemplified in the brilliant leadership of Henry L. Stimson.

The commonalty are grateful for this statesman who placed duty and honesty above party line.

"The Woolly Pandit"

In your October 19 editorial "The Woolly Pandit," you resorted to a level of attack that is not worthy of The Washington Post. The writer of the editorial seems to me to be the "woolly one." Whatever Mr. Nehru's ideas, and I am not in a position to pass judgment upon them, the implication in your editorial that they are not worthy of consideration is to reveal either a tragic ignorance of the Asian situation or a childish peeve because our ideas are not accepted without debate.

We need India's good will as much as India needs ours. Can we not speak very frankly and still retain our mutual respect, without which there is no basis for world cooperation.

"Mr. Hoover's Speech"

It was certainly a shock to me to read your editorial of October 22, entitled "Mr. Hoover's Speech." Apparently everybody except the Editor of The Washington Post heard the repeated statements of officials of the Government at the time the Marshall Plan was inaugurated and many times since, that its justification for America was to strengthen the defense of western Europe against communism.

Your reliance in the editorial upon the language of the objectives of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948 is a little naive for an editorial staff on the Washington scene. Perhaps this particular editorial writer had been so much interested in the "humanitarian" objectives of the aid to Europe program that his eyes were closed to the self-interest objectives which were, in fact, also quite important to the American people. Europe was frequently referred to by Administration officials as America's first line of defense, or words to that effect.

Physicians Forum

Dr. Rand, who is president of the D. C. chapter of the National Physicians Forum has, in a letter published October 21, proclaimed that organization's support of socialized medicine.

The lay public is perhaps not well acquainted with this group to which only a very few of our American medical men belong. The National Physicians Forum has repeatedly indorsed such persons as Paul Robeson. It has campaigned for Henry Wallace and the Progressive Party. It has violently opposed any legislation intended to curb communism in the U. S. A. This organization deluges the medical profession with invitations to attend a meeting, usually called a "rally" in support of such characters as Paul Robeson or invites them to contribute to the Progressive Party.

Considering this background, it is not reasonable that the National Physicians Forum has the welfare of America and Americans in mind by its indorsement of socialized medicine.

Anacostia Exclusion

In the action of the Board of Education applauding the exclusion of the mixed cast of "Faith of Our Fathers" from the Anacostia High School, the community has witnessed an exhibition of the enslavement of mind and spirit to a mean and outdated prejudice. At a time when the educational systems of States nearby and farther south are yielding to the irresistible force of a democratic idealism, the majority of the Board of Education has hidden behind a "spirit" that never was in the law to defend: the refusal of the principal of the school to permit white and colored actors to appear on the stage of the auditorium. The question of intermingling of students was not involved.

In defense of this, the majority of the board has read into the law what never was intended and, indeed, has never before been claimed: that it is illegal for whites and Negroes to be present at the same time in a District public school during school hours. And as excuse for this interpretation, they have pleaded that the school principal dared not do otherwise, seeing that she felt intimidated by threats of violence by the students!

Even accepting the unproved hypothesis that such substantial threats were actually made, since when do the adolescent outbursts of high school students determine the policies of our schools? Why was there no public hearing on this important question?

Tensions Of Rearmament

By Malvina Lindsay

'Mature Mind' Therapy

THE PROSPECT of armed camp living is beginning to mean something more to Americans than changed surroundings and scarce goods. Human tensions are building up. And with them rises the need for a new "conquest of fear."

Parents of young children are reported among the most disturbed over what the future holds. Much of the recent search for "safe" rural or suburban retreats has come from those who "don't worry about ourselves, but about the children."

Parents also are concerned over what to tell children about a conflict and a threat of war that dominate headlines, radio, television. And how are they to rear children to be calm-nerved for the uncertain times ahead? This last question frequently comes up in the preliminary meetings being held over the Nation for the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth, scheduled for December.

Then there is the broken family situation caused by the Korean war and the draft. With 80 percent of the men in the armed forces under 25, anxious mothers and desolate young wives are keeping the Associated Services for the Armed Forces (successor to the USO) busy. Increasing numbers of servicemen's wives and children are following them to camp. Relatives have been thronging ports of embarkation.

OFTEN THOSE left behind are unprepared psychologically for this upset in their lives. No more than many of the youth being called to service do they understand the why and what of the present dilemma. There is much juvenile reaction: Why should we bother about what goes on in Korea? Why should our generation be picked on? Why hasn't my neighbor been called? Why don't the British do more?

Even higher taxes are beginning to cause tensions, and these are due to multiply once there is full realization of the cost of the defense program. Here again is found the childish belief that some superman or supermeasure can "get us out of this financial mess"—even save us from having to pay the piper for rearmament in the years ahead.

Working girls are being severely hit by the tensions of rearmament, it was reported by YWCA representatives at a recent national meeting of the organization's business, professional and industrial councils.

In many cases their marriage plans have been upset. Some see future chances for marriage diminishing if increasing numbers of young men are sent out of the country. Home burdens are falling heavier on young women as their brothers are drafted. Their educational plans are being changed. Some even face insecurity about jobs owing to shifts in industry.

ADJUSTMENT to the new way of life that has been thrust upon this country is difficult because peril is yet largely intangible. There is no frenzy of patriotism arising out of "hot" warfare. And, safely protected for so long by our oceans, we have no tradition of preparedness against international burglars.

Understanding of what is going on is the first step in overcoming the jitters many face in this grim era, say psychologists. That also applies to children. Those past 5 are the ones who begin to ask questions and to have a concern about death. Child training experts say their questions about war should be answered truthfully, yet as briefly and reassuringly as possible. As they see their older brothers being drafted, hear the constant talk about atom bombs, they are bound to be curious.

The need of a positive rather than a negative approach in dealing with their questions and fears is advised by Dr. Alice V. Keliher, professor of education at New York University. What we are standing for rather than what we are fighting against should be emphasized, she believes.

But the greatest danger children face is that of absorbing the anxieties and fears of their elders. Hence the biggest job of parents today, say psychologists, is to cultivate emotional stability. The British bombings, it was found, did not upset youngsters when their parents or those in charge of them remained calm and confident.

This points up the widespread need today for adults who will give courage and confidence, not only to disturbed children, but to the large number of emotionally unstable grownups being affected by the anxiety and uncertainty about them. In defense planning for volunteer activities along material lines, it would seem some effort would also be made to organize groups in every community who would study and seek to practice the therapy of the mature mind.

Wake Island

The correspondent in your issue of October 19, who expressed surprise that two men on an island in the Pacific should take it upon themselves to decide upon United States policy in Asia has been asleep longer than he suspects. Did not Hitler and Mussolini follow a similar procedure in their Brenner Pass meetings? And how about Winston Churchill and Franklin D. Roosevelt on a battleship in mid-Atlantic? Not to mention Tehran, Yalta, Potsdam, etc. since time immemorial.

A Communication

Fairfax Government: County Executive Plan

By David Lawrence

(Former Vice Chairman, Fairfax County Study Commission)

ALTHOUGH I am convinced that the county executive form is far better for Fairfax County than the county manager form of government, nevertheless I want to express my appreciation for the splendid editorial in your issue of October 22. I am particularly glad you pointed out how unfortunate it is that "the controversy has become one between the county executive and county manager forms rather than between change and the status quo."

Your editorial was truly objective and said clearly some things that needed to be said, especially the following: "Each of the two new forms would give the supervisors real authority to make policy and to control the budget." You are quite right that the principal differences are "in the degree of authority to be given the county executive or manager and in the method of electing supervisors."

As one who served on the Fairfax Study Commission I am appreciative of your statement also that our report was a "signal victory" for champions of both the county manager and county executive plan because both systems "provide for drastic overhauling of the present outmoded structure."

I REGRET, however, that you have accepted the oft-repeated but not proved theory that because of population differentials the supervisors from the three less populous rural districts may block the wishes of the three other supervisors representing the more populous districts. You add: "Whether they have actually done that is besides the point, for the present board is rural-minded."

Why are the representatives of the three populous districts "rural-minded"? Is it possible that the people of those populous districts with urban conditions have not chosen their supervisors with a county-wide approach in mind? And if so, why is this true?

The answer lies in the indifference of the voters in the populous counties as well as in other counties. This will not be cured by making the unit of representation geographically larger than it is today. If anything, the unit should be made smaller so that a man of broad view known to and approved by a particular neighborhood or contiguous neighborhoods can be elected supervisor through the votes of a majority of his district.

We hear it said that each voter will be voting for six supervisors under the county manager plan. Is it conceivable that the voters in one district will know enough about the personal capacity of any of the 20 or more candidates for the board from the other districts—or will the voters have to depend on the political machine or a coalition of pressure groups to hand them a slate on which to vote "ja"?

FAIRFAX County, it should be remembered, is 417 square miles in area and it is approximately 25 miles from one end of the county to the other. County-wide voting affords a perfect setup for a political machine or for those ambitious politicians who hide behind the pressure groups and stand ready to cash in on the work done by them, innocent though the citizens in these groups may be of such political purposes. The sure way to beat the political machine is to split up the voting areas and break up its political power wielded over large areas or big segments of population.

The general laws of Virginia, moreover, provide a procedure for redistricting. To attempt by indirection to accomplish what the law specifically states shall be the method for correcting inequities in representation is to attempt to bypass a direct method provided in the general law.

I have always favored redistricting and believe that it is practicable to obtain even more magisterial districts to take care of the representation needs of the growing population in Fairfax County. The fact that this may result in giving the populous areas more members on the Board of Supervisors than the rural districts could have does not trouble me at all. What does trouble me is that the people in any one district—populous or rural—may never be able again to elect their own supervisor. I do not like to see whole areas disenfranchised. I do not like to see political machines or their counterpart taking control of a county. This is not only possible but probable under the county-wide requirement which should never have been included anyway by the Legislature in drafting the county manager plan.

IN THE last paragraph of your editorial you have put your finger on a real problem: "The need to select top caliber candidates and guard against machine manipulation would, of course, remain under either system."

But I submit that a chance to vote against the machine in six different places is much better than to try to fight a machine in only one county-wide election. To corroborate this point all we need to do is to examine the political power today in Fairfax County and we will find that it is vested primarily in a few officials who are elected by county-wide voting. They are the ones who are today fighting change in Fairfax County government. Their brothers under the skin—the politicians who are lurking behind the pressure groups to take over under the county manager system—will be far more firmly entrenched in power than these few elected officials ever have been.

It'll be a sad day for Fairfax County if it goes to county-wide voting for supervisors, considering the fact also that the powers of the Board of Supervisors are by law immeasurably increased under the county manager form. Henrico County adopted the county manager form but now elects its supervisors by the method of separate districts. This was prescribed by the Legislature in a special act and never has been questioned in the courts nor challenged by petition of the voters for a referendum. The possibility of county-wide elections and virtual abolition of magisterial districts is a serious obstacle to the growth of progressive government among the counties of Virginia. Out of the entire 100 counties only 4 have adopted either the county executive or the county manager system.

The so-called county-wide or in some cases "at large" voting is suitable for small counties where urban conditions cover approximately 100 percent of the geographical area concerned. It is not suitable where there are mixed conditions and where large rural areas are to be found.

ON THE subject of the degree of authority to be given the county manager, I think you may have overestimated the amount of abuse that could arise under a system of joint responsibility by the Board of Supervisors and the county administrator in the matter of making appointments.

An examination of the situation throughout the country, made by the National Municipal League in its latest digest, reveals that while there are more than 3000 counties in the United States, only 14 of them have adopted what are known as approved managerial systems.

It is worth noting also that 6 out of the 14 counties require joint responsibility on the part of the supervisors and the county administrator in the matter of making appointments. Out of the remaining eight where there is no legal requirement to confirm appointments by the governing board, there is one county which retains the election of the two most important officials by popular vote and there are two other counties where city conditions prevail, such as in Rochester, N. Y., and Atlanta, Ga. Here is what the National Municipal League says in approving joint participation of the Board of Supervisors and the county administrator in the making of appointments:

"It is admissible (as in some city manager charters) to require the manager's more important appointments to be submitted for confirmation by the board, since a manager holding office at the pleasure of the board must satisfy the latter in all things anyway, but a situation or practice in which the board initiates the selection of those whom the manager is to direct contradicts the theory and intent of the plan."

Under the county executive form the Board of Supervisors has no lawful authority to initiate the selection of any employes of the county in its administrative service. All appointments must be recommended first by the county executive—he can be an administrator from inside or outside the county—and if his recommendations for appointment are repeatedly rejected, he has the right to make a public protest and to resign, which affords an ample check against abuse.

Election Date Set in Israeli Cabinet Crisis

TEL AVIV, Israel, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—The laws committee of Parliament tentatively set February 20, 1951, as the date for a general election today after a sudden, unexpected revival of a cabinet crisis.

It is proposed that the election bill, and a measure providing for an interim government, shall be put before Parliament next week unless the crisis is solved.

Pinhas Rosen, leader of the Liberal Progressive Party, informed President Chaim Weizmann early today that he had abandoned his attempt to negotiate the formation of a cabinet.

Weizmann planned to call in other leaders in an attempt to break the complicated stalemate that resulted when Prime Minister David Ben-Curion resigned October 15. If some compromise is reached between Ben-Gurion and the orthodox bloc, the election may not be necessary.

Union of Zionist Units Urged by American Group

NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (AP).—The executive committee of the Zionist Organization of America today announced it had asked split Zionist groups in Israel to unite to form a center party to aid and strengthen the government in its present cabinet and economic crisis.

The committee adopted a declaration last night asking the general Zionist Party in Israel to join with the Progressive Party, which also is composed of Zionists. This union should be large and strong enough to "serve as a stabilizing force between groups and classes committed to conflicting ideologies," the declaration said.

3:30—Senator McKellar (D., Tenn.).

India, Old and New

By Marquis Childs

From Feudalism To Centralism

JAIPUR, India—Down a broad avenue thronged on both sides with humanity comes a circus parade that no sane circus owner would even dare to dream about. It is the Procession of Dussehara, which is part of the ancient Hindu ceremonial that takes place annually at harvest time.

Childs

First come the elephants richly caparisoned with silver, brilliant scarlet, and gold cloth. Their trunks, heads and ears are painted in designs traditional with each individual mahout. On the most massive elephant of all is a solid gold howdah.

Then come the ceremonial carts, many of them 300 and 400 years old, done in red and green velvet embroidered with gold. Each is pulled by four white bullocks also in ceremonial coverings.

Next in line is a regimental band in uniforms of blue and red, with red and gold turbans having gold pompons. Then there are more elephants.

Toward the end of the procession in an open carriage of state rides His Highness the Maharajah of Jaipur. He wears a long blue and silver brocaded coat with huge diamond buttons made by Cartier. His red turban also bears a great diamond ornament. He carries one of the fabulous treasures of Jaipur—a ceremonial sword and scabbard, the hilt of which is almost solidly encrusted with diamonds and emeralds. Immediately behind him is a troop of household cavalry wearing white uniforms with gold facings and blue and silver turbans. Each cavalryman rides a black horse.

As the light fades from the sky this still-flowing procession with its camels richly garbed seems like a mirage out of the past. It is what is left of feudal India and is rapidly passing out. The maharajah's house guests all agree wistfully that the Dussehara procession this year is "nothing like it was in the good old days."

THE 41-YEAR-old maharajah is no longer the absolute monarch in his inherited principality of Jaipur. He is now the governor of a province that includes Jaipur and 21 other princely states, among them Jodhpur, Bikaner and Udaipur.

This is the solution by which the princely states merged with the central government. The British, who played the princely rulers off against each other and against the independence movement, said it would never be done short of a century of bloodshed and war. Now, on paper at least, it has been accomplished and the royal governors, working in cooperation with the central administration in New Delhi, have taken over.

But many feel the test is still to come. Critics say that the areas that have been combined in the new states are too large, considering the primitive transportation and communications.

They also raise the question about power and efficiency now that the old absolutism has been arbitrarily abolished.

There is still unsolved the issue of large landowners who formerly had a semiautonomous status under their princely rulers. In the new state of Rajasthan, which is governed by the Maharajah of Jaipur, they still possess their land although they have been largely shorn of their power.

The Maharajah of Jaipur is working hard at his job, although there are many features about it that are new and alien to him. His chief interest is soldiering. He is commander of the army for Rajasthan, with the rank of lieutenant general. This is a most important function since Rajasthan has a 600-mile border with Pakistan and there are constant border incidents.

THE TROOPS in this area are largely deployed in the wild desert region adjoining the border, making much use of camels since water is sometimes 40 miles from an encampment. They seem like thoroughly trained soldiers. For the Dussehara they put on their weekend ceremony of trooping their colors, and this was magnificently done and reminiscent of India and Kipling in the great days of the empire. Both the foot soldiers and the cavalry moved with the precision of British guards through intricate maneuvers while the maharajah sat statue-like on a white Arabian stallion taking a salute of honor as the soldiers marched past.

The maharajah is still young looking, with an infectious gaiety that is known in Paris, London and New York. Next to soldiering he is keenest about polo and is the new president of the India Polo Association.

When he stood with his beautiful maharenee on the portico of the city palace, the guard was drawn up while the band played the Jaipur anthem. The musicians faced the guests who stood on a floodlighted lawn that is claimed to be the most perfect in the world. It was somehow an almost incredible sight. This brilliant reception, which is part public and part private, was the past taking a long step into the present and perhaps, with good luck, into the future.

But it is such a very long step that whether it can be safely made short of disintegration and perhaps breakdown is in the lap of the gods. And in the lap, it may be, of the gods of the Dussehara ceremony. For as a kind of final touch from beyond the sweep of the floodlights, beyond the trees gaily illuminated with colored lights and beyond the walls enclosing the palace gardens comes the sound of chanting voices from the Hindu temple.

PRESIDENTS WHO HAVE KNOWN ME

By GEORGE E. ALLEN $3.00

This book will tell you a lot about how our country is really run

—if you can just stop laughing!

As every Washington correspondent knows, George E. Allen is portly, jovial, and closely connected with the White House. He has been called everything from Court Jester to political mystery man, in the meanwhile providing official Washington with a sense of humor throughout the entire Roosevelt and Truman era.

Since he has never forgotten a good anecdote in his life, it was probably inevitable that he would write a book. But no one could have foreseen the result, just published. It is Inside Stuff of the most breathtaking order. It is brash, almost carelessly informative and hugely funny. Its contents range from the reason why George's uncle wouldn't use Bilbo's name in front of ladies (he thought it vulgar) to Allen's part in securing the 1944 Presidential nomination for Truman. It bristles with hitherto untold stories of Senators, lobbyists, sure-footed politicians (and occasional politicians who fall flat on their faces).

Roughly, it's about 60% humor and 40% fact and opinion. Pardon us for pointing, but we thought it a good idea to show you some samples and to indicate the humor with an [H] the fact with an [F] and the opinion with an [O] Sometimes they overlap—but always they are fascinating:

[F] How Allen nearly killed Eisenhower

"Those days, General Eisenhower divided his time between Telegraph Cottage, which was just outside of London, and his temporary headquarters near Plymouth. One day the two of us were having lunch at Telegraph Cottage when the alarm sounded for a buzz bomb. We sauntered toward a bomb shelter. That is, General Ike sauntered, and I couldn't very well besmirch the Allen military record by running ahead of him. So I sauntered too, desperately. But when the second warning sounded, an orderly suggested that the General run for it. My feet, overhearing the orderly before I did, carried me to the shelter well ahead of the General. I accidentally shut the shelter door in his face, locking him outside. The bomb, fortunately, fell some distance away."

[H&F] The best legal advice

"In 1936 Sam Rosenman gave President Roosevelt some advice. Campaigning for re-election that year, Roosevelt was confronted with the necessity of writing a speech to be delivered in Pittsburgh. Four years earlier, he had delivered a speech in the same place advocating drastic government economy. Now he wanted to advocate lavish government spending. What he wanted Rosenman to do was to figure out some way of executing this about-face and make it seem that Roosevelt was still marching in the same direction in 1936 as he had been in 1933. Rosenman thought it over for a few days and then told the President: 'I think, Mr. President, that I have found a way out.' 'What is it, Sam?' Roosevelt eagerly asked. 'Deny that you made a speech in Pittsburgh in 1932.'"

[H] Democracy at work

"In those better days, Hoover is supposed to have had some fun in him. Some people even give him credit for several good stories about Calvin Coolidge, his predecessor. One of these had to do with a proposal that a well-known captain of industry be placed in his Cabinet. A Coolidge associate had objected: 'But, Mr. President, that fellow's a _____' 'Well,' Coolidge replied, 'don't you think they ought to be represented, too?'"

[H&O] The problem of F.D.R.'s jokes

"Franklin D. Roosevelt was a man I instinctively didn't rate high. I had to learn to like him as one learns to like olives.... I discovered upon closer acquaintance that he was capable of infinite kindness as well as greatness. But the fact remained that he laughed only perfunctorily at my jokes, and I tried all varieties on him. Even worse, he responded with bad jokes of his own, and then I had to laugh at them more convincingly than he had laughed at mine."

[F] How Vice-Presidents are made

"After dinner, over coffee and drinks in the study on the second floor, the talk turned to arrangements for the convention in Chicago (1944), and ultimately to the Vice-Presidency. Byrnes was ruled out because his nomination might be resented both by northern Negroes and by Catholics who would remember that he had been raised in a Catholic household but was now Protestant. Barkley was dismissed when Roosevelt remarked that the Kentuckian was older than he. Douglas appealed to the President because of his dynamic personality and youth. Roosevelt pointed out that Douglas had a kind of boy-scout quality about him that might be appealing to voters, and besides, played an interesting game of poker. But the others were not enthusiastic. They said Douglas had no visible followers with the possible exception of Ickes, who also had no visible followers, with the possible exception of Ickes. That left Truman."

[H] How it feels to be a public scandal

"The President appointed me a director of R.F.C. What I should have expected—but in my innocence did not—was the outcry in the press against my confirmation. If I had ever entertained any illusions about my character and capacities (and I had), they were now stripped from me by the columnists and commentators. I became a man possessed of neither integrity nor intelligence. I became a scandal. It is a strange sensation, being a public scandal. I read the columns and I began to be outraged myself at this ridiculous appointment of a man without a vestige of qualification for the job. It was difficult to remember at times that they were talking about me, George Allen, a fellow for whom I personally had the highest regard. A lesser man would have been engulfed by this wave of protest. But fortunately a lesser man was not available at the time."

[O] Truman's Secretary of Good Humor

"Everyone has a few friends he likes to run into on a street corner. These people have a quality that defies definition. One feels better for talking with them and seeing them, regardless of what they say. One is somehow bucked up by them. Truman is such a person. He gives his friends more than he takes from them. I don't know exactly why, but I think it is because he has infectious courage. I have never seen him in a despairing mood, although I have seen him suffer defeats that would plunge me into depths—in fact, have.... Before I retired from politics, while I was still a part of the Truman Administration, I was convinced that one of my functions was to give the President surcease occasionally through laughter. But now that it is all over, I can admit the truth: that he cheered me up more often than I cheered him."

Rival Parties Differ On Absentee Voting

Democrats and Republicans in the District are engaged in a big get-out-the-absentee-vote campaign but they're differing on how to do it in regard to vital Ohio with its torrid Taft-Ferguson senatorial contest.

Democratic absentee headquarters at 1508 H st. nw. has procured from one Ohio county election clerk 5000 application blanks to be used in getting an absentee ballot. The Republicans claim such procedure is illegal.

The controversy boils down to the legal interpretation of a clause in the Ohio election laws about how a voter goes about asking for a ballot. The GOP interpretation is that each individual must write the clerk of his own county board (and Ohio has 88 counties).

Mrs. Faith Fisher, head of the GOP bureau at 810 Connecticut ave. nw., wrote Ohio's Secretary of State Charles F. Sweeney and got an answer that the voter must apply to his particular county for the application (not the ballot itself.)

But Mrs. Ethel Black, who runs the Democratic bureau, said the same application forms are used all over Ohio, that they were issued by the headquarters here in 1948 without dispute and that only one county (Franklin, in which Columbus is located) has indicated any objection to the procedure. The Franklin clerk, on receiving an application blank issued here, merely sends the voter another copy with his county name rubber stamped in the appropriate spot.

In every case the local election board checks the application against the registration lists before mailing a ballot.

Other than Ohio, there are available at both party headquarters blank forms to cover the remaining 40 States which permit one form or another of absentee voting.

'It's Torture'

Sentencing Hard Part of Judge's Job

By Joseph Paull
Post Reporter

Most District Court judges are worried more by "sentence day" than almost any other phase of their job.

It is on "sentence day," usually Friday, that the judges order that the prisoners before they go free, are placed on probation, are sent to prison, or to the electric chair.

What do the judges feel at such moments?

"It is torture, mostly," according to Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut.

"I often think that there but for the grace of God go I," Judge Matthew F. McGuire says.

"I wish that we could make an exact science out of sentencing," declares Judge Edward M. Curran.

"What must I be doing to the prisoner's family when I send him off to jail?" asks Judge Edward A. Tamm.

Much Is Guesswork

So much of it, the jurists acknowledge, is sheer guesswork. There is more soul-searching than fact-finding. They never actually know whether they are doing the right thing.

And this is true, although the judge has received much help before the prisoner comes before him.

During the period between conviction and sentence, the probation office has been searching the prisoner's background. His schooling, family, job, responsibilities, prior criminal record, intelligence, and general attitude are scrutinized.

Friends may write in letters, the prisoner is interviewed, and the statements are checked and sometimes double-checked.

The probation officer makes his report and recommendations. From there, it is up to the judge.

The lawyer makes a little speech, and the defendant may say a few words and the judge intones:

"It is the sentence of this court that you be . . ."

It is then over—theoretically.

Brings Shriek From Rear

At this moment, often, there is a shriek from the rear of the court, where a parent, a wife, or a child is crying. The prisoner gives the judge, as often as not, one last dirty look before going down the elevator to the cell block.

Today, no judge here uses rubber-stamp sentences.

They say repeatedly that they want to consider each prisoner as an individual. On the other hand, they acknowledge that community pressure, and often the welfare of the prisoners, call for more or less uniform sentences. Of course, this is moderated by the human factors in each case.

Judge Curran has suggested for the future a behavior clinic where the offender is given a sociological, physical, psychological and psychiatric examination.

Other experts have suggested that perhaps the answer is to place the final determination with a "disposition tribunal."

As Judge Alexander Holtzoff puts it:

"No human being can make an infallible prediction that some other human being will continue to commit crimes. At best, such a thought is in the field of speculation and conjecture."

Peron Bids for Tourists

BUENOS AIRES, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—A decree of the Peron government has abolished all visa requirements for tourists who are citizens of any American republic. Argentina's determination to get a larger share of inter-American tourist traffic with its foreign exchange income was seen behind the move.

Police Radio Is Lieut. Beall's 18-Year Beat

By Alfred E. Lewis
Post Reporter

The job of converting the radio system of the Metropolitan Police Department from AM to FM is 50 percent completed, Lieut. Frank M. Beall said yesterday.

About 75 cars already are operating on the new frequency, and Lieut. Beall figures that the other 75 cars and 110 motorcycles will be using the new sets by the middle of 1951.

The lieutenant is the "Mr. Radio" of the police department and this latest job of conversion is only one of the many he has tackled during 18 years with KGA885 (police call letters).

Growth of Police Radio

Back in 1932 when the lieutenant joined the radio station there were 15 scout cars and four headquarters cruisers equipped with short wave receiving sets.

"They proved so valuable that we equipped all the cars. In 1938 we began experimenting with two-way sets," Beall explained.

"After using a set in a test car for awhile, we installed one in a scout car to see how it would help in police work. No. 2 was one of our busiest precincts, and we found the radio so efficient it was almost vital.

Ten Men in Crew

Lieut Beall has 10 men under his command split up into shifts so that a crew is on duty 24 hours a day. All are policemen and all are licensed by the Federal Communications Commission as radio operators.

Most of them have engineering and technological degrees, but Beall got his education the hard way—beginning in 1924 as a serviceman on crystal sets, and continuing his studies at home and at work.

Right now the radio men are keeping two stations (high and low frequency) on the air, servicing sets in all the cars and motorcycles, 25 amplifiers at headquarters, plus additional amplifiers in all 15 precincts, and equipment in 7 harbor patrol boats.

At the same time they are installing the new high frequency sets as the hard-to-get equipment arrives. Congress appropriated $56,000 in the 1950 fiscal budget and $80,000 in the 1951 budget to complete the job.

The new frequency makes for more efficient operation and better reception to and from scout cars. It eliminates interruptions from electrical storms and practically cuts out "dead spots," areas in which radio signals are now deflected or absorbed.

Lieut. Beall said that the new frequency assigned is in line with the policy adopted by the FCC to get radios of all municipalities all over the country on a high frequency band so the power allowed would cause minimum interference with other services.

The old frequency bands, Beall explained, are getting crowded with other services—such as public utilities, fire and police departments in surrounding areas. The new frequency gives the District police a clear channel.

Beall is 53 and lives with his wife at 717 Van Buren st. nw. He has three sons, all married. None of them is a radio mechanic.

"When we get this job completed," the lieutenant said, "there probably will be something new, and we will start all over again. As a matter of fact, we are already experimenting with two-way sets for the motorcycles, so perhaps by the time we get around to working on the motorcycles we will just put two-way sets in them."

Asked about television sets in scout cars, Beall said:

South Africa Sets Up Press Inquiry Board

PRETORIA, South Africa, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—The government has named a seven-man board to make a sweeping investigation of the South African press, including the way in which newspapers handle their news and comment and alleged monopolistic control tendencies.

Sugar Gift To England Embarrasses

A misunderstanding over who was responsible for sending a gift of 5040 pounds of sugar to sweets-hungry England has caused a Washington woman considerable embarrassment.

She is Mrs. Lucy Graves, wife of Col. Ernest Graves of 2901 16th st. nw., and treasurer of the Food Packaging Service of the District Chapter of the American Women's Voluntary Services.

The story came to light yesterday after Washington newspapers received letters from the English Ministry of Food requesting that they publish pictures of the distribution of sugar "which was the gift of Mrs. L. Graves of Washington, D. C."

Mrs. Graves reported yesterday she was very embarrassed because she was getting credit for something she did only in her capacity as an AWVS officer.

It seems that the Food Packaging Service decided last summer to use up the backlog of $500 cash that had been pledged for food to overseas countries. They decided to buy sugar and send it to Britain since sugar is still rationed there.

The sugar, distributed to needy homes and to school children, was supposed to be given anonymously but evidently Mrs. Graves' name appeared on the bills of lading. The recipients thought it came from her.

Mrs. Graves has been receiving hundreds of letters of thanks from the school children who received the sugar but she is still embarrassed at receiving the credit which should be "divided among many people."

Defense Cost U. S. Burden, Mayors Say

The U. S. Conference of Mayors yesterday took "direct issue" with the National Security Resources Board on who should pay the big civil defense bill.

The mayors' executive committee announced it would call on Congress next month to recognize that "the common defense" is a Federal responsibility, that civil defense supplies and equipment "are as vital and important as the building of guns, tanks and battleships" and therefore "the major financial burden" should fall on the national government.

Paul V. Betters, executive director of the conference, said he interpreted this to mean that the Federal Government ought to pay something like 80 percent

Betters said that "if we mean business" about civil defense a full scale program, exclusive of providing shelters, would cost around two billion dollars. He said the mayors feel the cities should pay the salaries of employes and the cost of maintenance and operation involved but that the Federal Government should put up the money for capital outlays in the four main fields; medical and hospital supplies, fire fighting and public works equipment, communications and warning system and radiological and bacterelogical monitoring devices.

The National Security Resources Board has taken the general position that the civil defense job is basically a State and local responsibility with Federal contributions to handle extra burdens.

Skin Scarlet Letters Suggested For Hospital Use in Disasters

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

Use of a red skin pencil and a grim form of shorthand was suggested here yesterday for speeding the handling of mass casualties.

For example, victims of atom bomb explosions might be marked on their foreheads with such writings as a U, for urgent; H, for internal hemorrhage, or M¼, signifying the victim had been given a quarter-grain of morphine to ease his pains.

The emergency marking suggestion was one of a number of details discussed here yesterday by a panel of U. S. Public Health Service experts at the current 49th annual conference of State and Territorial Health Officers. Yesterday's conference sessions were held at the National Institutes of Health, in Bethesda, Md.

The shorthand scheme and other suggestions for handling mass casualties were based, it was said, on plans developed at the 25 Marine hospitals of the hospital division, USPHS. The plans were drawn up after studies of such peacetime disasters as the Coconut Grove night club fire, in Boston, and the Texas City, Tex., explosion and fire.

At another session for the assembled health officers, the 125 delegates were told that most people apparently prefer to go to their clergyman, not their doctor, when emotionally disturbed.

This preference was revealed, said Dr. John A. Clausen, social scientist of the National Institute of Mental Health, in a recent public opinion poll made in Phoenix, Ariz., by University of Michigan questioners.

FAO Faces Funds Problem

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization is having money and labor difficulties, Director General Norris E. Dodd told the FAO Council yesterday. Both troubles are tied up to the move of FAO to Rome, beginning in January.

The 18-nation council met to prepare for the 63-governmetn FAO conference that will convene here November 3. The latter will plan details of the move from Washington. The 1949 conference voted last November to transfer to Rome, after a bitter fight at the Shoreham Hotel. The United States was beaten by one vote by a coalition headed by Great Britain.

Most of FAO employes are refusing to transfer to Rome, Dodd said. Furthermore, FAO, with an "apparent deficit on October 15 of $200,000" is out of funds to operate with, let alone pay moving costs.

Dodd expressed the hope that member nations will pay their 1951 assessments early, to furnish some cash to go on.

"The financial outlook for next year is a very serious one," Dodd warned the delegates.

"One of the most serious aspects is that FAO now has no reserves, as in previous years, to start operations during the coming year.

"Thus we cannot begin the move to Rome or initiate work on the 1951 program unless sufficient funds for both purposes are received from governments as early as January or February.

"In other words, it is essential that a large share of the 1951 contributions be received in the early weeks of the year."

Dodd covered the labor situation as follows:

"We shall be hampered," he said, "in carrying out the program during at least the first half of 1951, partly by the physical disruption of the move to Rome, partly by the fact that a large part of the staff will not be making the transfer."

Dodd put those refusing to go to Rome as "some 80 percent of those below and 40 percent of those above Grade 10." There are now more than 600 FAO employes in Washington. FAO officials added that of the Americans on the FAO payroll, "more than 80 percent" are declining to go to Rome.

A financial statement showed that the United States' contribution to FAO expenses is more than 27 percent.

Dodd listed one "cheerful report" in the financial statement. "Both the Italian government and the United Nations are prepared to make a loan of $800,000 to FAO to cover part of the cost of removal of headquarters," he said.

At the Little

A Rambling Story Bests Great Rosay

"Backstreets of Paris," at the Little, is notable only for the appearance of Francoise Rosay in the leading role. It's the sort of atmosphere-cum-characters thing the French often do well, but in this case the answer is no.

Most of the fault lies in a sprawling yarn which has the great Rosay playing the keeper of a dive that passes for a hotel. Some time back, it appears, Miss Rosay killed her husband. She doesn't treat her daughter much better, for she saves expense money by treating her offspring as her joint's little slavey.

Money to keep rolling isn't limited to the roomers' rent. Mama latches onto any shady deal she can and one night an old pal turns up with money and gems that are decidedly suspicious, so mama turns stool-pigeon to inform on her friend. There's a twist to the ring's rightful possession, and in the midst of everything the poor little daughter falls in love with a casual peddler who, after accepting her alms, calmly goes off with the Old Friend.

There's much more to it than this, but it does seem a shame that the picture fails to provide Miss Rosay with the vehicle all her admirers would prefer.

The great star is invariably fascinating to watch, and while the rest of the cast is able enough, the rambling story and murky atmosphere defeat them all.—R. L. C.

United Nations Unit Feted at ASCAP Dinner

A plea that "every effort" be made to work out an international copyright convention "to which a majority of the civilized nations, including our own, can subscribe" was voiced last night by Herman Finkelstein, general attorney for ASCAP.

Finkelstein spoke at a dinner at the Mayflower given by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in honor of the Committee on International Copyright Experts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Other speakers included Dr. Luther Evans, Librarian of Congress and a United States delegate to UNESCO, and Valerio De Sanctis, Italian delegate to UNESCO. Otta A. Harbach, ASCAP president, presided.

Rudolf Friml, noted composer and pianist, headed a list of entertainers performing for ASCAP members and UNESCO delegates from several nations.

U. S. Food Being Loaded For Yugoslav Relief

Secretary of State Acheson disclosed yesterday that American food already is being loaded for shipment to drought-stricken Yugoslavia in response to requests from Marshal Tito's anti-Soviet Communist government.

The Export-Import Bank advanced two million dollars of an existing 15 million dollar credit for the purpose. Some of the two million dollars was used to buy American Government surplus commodities from the Agriculture Department, Acheson said at a news conference.

This will permit the shipments to start immediately. The flow is expected to increase many times in volume before winter makes distribution difficult.

Sea Search Ended

BOSTON, Oct. 25 (U.P.). — The Coast Guard said today it has discontinued the search for 11 missing crew members of the SS North Voyageur who are now "presumed lost" off Cape Race, Newfoundland.

'Outrage' Is Only A Good Intention

By Richard L. Coe

FOR ALL ITS high-mindedness, Keith's "Outrage" struck me as a small-scale, whimpering bore.

This one comes out passionately to the rescue of young ladies who have been criminally attacked, a gesture rather like congratulating people who go to the aid of elderly ladies who've been knocked down by trucks.

The strong point of this Ida Lupino-directed little film is, I presume, its sincerity, but there are so many set-ups in the young lady's reaction to her terrible experience, that I even question that claim to virtue.

We see the heroine, Mala Powers, leaving her office work late at night. She senses someone is pursuing her, breaks into a confused run, but is overtaken. So shattered is she by her experience that she is ashamed to face family, fiance, friends and fellow workers. She runs away, is befriended by a young minister, but refuses to let her family know whether she's living or dead, and when a fellow makes a pass at her during an open air dance, she heads for a lonely spot where she conks him out with a handy wrench. The young minister, frankly attracted to her, manages to set her straight at last and sends her back to her family and fiance.

Too many questions occur to a watcher: Why should the girl react so strongly against her family and loved one, even selfishly? How is it that, when pursued, she always does the wrong thing about getting free of her pursuer? Surely, in such a case, acquaintances and office workers wouldn't begin to whisper, point and in general behave like idiots. The human soul is a lonely thing, I'll grant, but it's not so lonely or abused as this.

Miss Powers, shortly to be seen as Roxanne to Jose Ferrer's Cyrano de Bergerac, is expressive as the girl, though she's called on for some extremely foolish reactions. Tod Andrews proves likable as the restrained minister. The photographic approach is realistic—natural settings, little make-up—but only accents the artifical twists of the story. The musical background is abysmal.

Also on Keith's screen is a short subject telling how "You Can Beat the A-Bomb." Though I'd like to have seen it, "Outrage" had given me enough misery for one day.

IN TOWN—and working: Farley Granger, Robert Walker and Alfred Hitchcock . . . Director Hitch is putting the boys through local scenes for "Stranger on a Train" . . . After hours they've clogged lobbies at the Gayety and the Mayflower.

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE week, they should call this . . . The star will be seen in her eagerly awaited role of Amanda in "The Glass Menagerie" starting this morning at the Warner . . . Tomorrow she'll be here to dedicate a plaque commemorating the former Washington Stage Door Canteen at the old Belasco Theater . . . Later that afternoon she'll be honored with a tea by the American Newspaper Women's Club on 20th st., and that night will join the cast of "The Relapse" for the American Theater Wing's "Rendezvous With the Stars" at the Mayflower ballroom starting at 9:30 . . . The day's program will aid the Wing's Washington Hospital Committee program for hospitalized veterans.

ANOTHER SUMMER theater? . . . Erica Donovan, whose Theatergate on New York's 44th st. had Katharine Cornell as a supporter before the war, will be talking to the Rotarians this day at Normandy Farms' luncheon tables . . . Negotiations seem to be afoot between Miss Donovan and Marjorie Hendricks for a summer theater at the popular restaurant HQ.

THE CHILDREN'S PLAYHOUSE, a northern Virginia venture organized by Mrs. E. A. Monaghan and Mrs. Edre Ferguson, will present two performances Saturday of "Ashes, Cinderella's Talking Cat." . . . These will be played at the Virginia Theater, Alexandria, at 10:30 a. m. and 2:30 p. m. . . . Seats at 85 cents and $1.20 may be reserved by calling Overlook 4376 . . . Started six months ago, the group has been surprisingly quick in getting its workshop under way for performances so early in life.

ANSWER DEPT.: Leaflets are out from Ford's Theater, Baltimore about the two-week visit of the D'Oyly Carte Gilbert and Sullivan company, opening November 13 with "The Mikado." . . . "Patience" takes over for Thursday with "Trial by Jury" and "Pinafore" completing the week . . . "Gondoliers" opens the second week for two nights, with "Iolanthe" billed Wednesday and "The Mikado" again Thursday . . . "Cox and Box" and "The Pirates of Penzance" conclude the run Friday and Saturday, November 24-25 . . . Evening prices: $4.22, $3.62, $2.41, $1.21; matinees Wednesdays and Saturdays: $3.62, $3.02, $2.41 and $1.21.

BROOKS ATKINSON, the Times man, winds up his review of "The Curious Savage" New York opening this way: "On its own terms as polite entertainment with a faint edge of satire . . . a fairly mild play. But many theatergoers are likely to regard the whole project as distasteful. Bedlam is not so delightfully amusing as it was a hundred years ago."

THE THEATER GUILD announces that two dividend plays, in which subscribers get first nick at the seats at subscription rates, will be "The Consul" and "Lost in the Stars," both coming to the Gayety in December . . . The series has been reopened for "The Relapse," current, and these "definite" future visitors: Katharine Hepburn in "As You Like It," Shirley Booth in "Come Back, Little Sheba," Thomas Mitchell in "Death of a Salesman" and the Lunts in "I Know My Love" . . . The Guild's office is in Room 120 of the Raleigh.

DIDJA KNOW that this is National Popcorn Week?

SHE SHOULDN'T TALK: Kathryn Grayson seems shocked at Mario Lanza's taste in suits, but get her—elbows on the table! Miss Grayson plays an opera singer of the last century visiting New Orleans, where she discovers Tenor Lanza in "The Toast of New Orleans" at the Palace

Test Proposed For Deferment Applicants

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Draft deferment of college students on the basis of a Nationwide test and State quotas was proposed yesterday by the American Council on Education.

The plan, drawn up by the council's committee on the relationship of higher education to the Federal Government was described by the committee as "more flexible" than the deferment policy recommended to Selective Service earlier this month by another group of educators.

The earlier plan calls for deferment of the "brightest" students in each class of each college each year. It was worked up by six professional and scientific advisory committees of Selective Service, headed by Dr. M. H. Trytten, of the National Research Council.

The new plan calls for a nationally administered test to determine (aptitude for education and training of all men on attaining the age of 18—when they must register for the draft. The committee suggested that this national test, still to be devised, provide a passing score equivalent to 110 of the World War II Army General Classification Test.

Those men getting a score of 110 or higher would then be permitted to apply for admission to college, or continue their college training on the basis of State quotas. These quotas would be determined on the number of students completing high school in each State in each year.

Members of the committee estimated that between 7 and 10 percent of the draftees would become eligible for deferment, roughly, two to three times as many as would be deferred under the Trytten system. However, a spokesman for the council's committee pointed out that not all the deferment eligibles actually would be deferred. The exact number to be deferred, he said, would have to be decided by the Federal Government.

Under the terms of the new plan after the deferred student's satisfactory completion of college, and if admitted, of graduate or professional education, he would be liable for his full period of military service—now 21 months—unless assigned by the President to some other service in the national interest.

"It is understood," the committee said, "that if the student voluntarily withdrew or fails to maintain satisfactory progress in accordance with the standards of the institution, he is immediately liable to call under Selective Service."

The committee also suggests "it seems desirable" women be enlisted or commissioned on a volunteer basis in all non-combatant services appropriate to their training and to the needs of the armed forces.

A spokesman said the committee realizes its plan makes no allowance for youths able to pass the national educational test but financially unable to enter college. On this score, the spokesman said, the committee plans to recommend a scholarship program in the near future.

Four Schoolchildren Struck by Auto . . .

The Washington Post

Bicycle Hurls Boy to Death

been tentatively set for 9 a. m. Saturday at St. John's Roman Catholic Church. Burial will be in the church cemetery.

A charge of having inadequate brakes and a technical charge of manslaughter were placed against the driver of the car, John H. Trageser, 24, an electrician, of 9642 Omaha Beach dr., Silver Spring. He was released in $500 bond pending a hearing in Silver Spring Police Court November 14.

Three Brothers Struck

Four schoolboys, three of them brothers, were struck by a car at 3:30 p. m. on U. S. 50 in Fairfax County about a quarter of a mile west of Camp Washington.

The boys are Charles Sisson, 15; Lester Sisson, 10; Robert Sisson, 12, and Wade Cox, 11, all of Camp Washington. All are students at Fairfax Elementary School.

They were taken to Arlington Hospital in the Fairfax town ambulance but only Lester Sisson, who suffered head injuries, was admitted. The others were released after treatment for cuts and bruises.

Fairfax County police said the car which struck the boys was driven by a 15-year-old Chantilly, Va., boy. He was held for juvenile action.

Just Off School Bus

According to police, the boys had just alighted from a school bus and started home, facing oncoming traffic, when the car came over a hill, skidded and struck them.

Maj. Harvey Tousignant, 40, Air Force doctor from San Antonio, Tex., and a companion Miss Vigdis Ferdinand, 29, of 606 Monticello ave., Falls Church, Va., were struck by a cab at 2 a. m. at 14th and K sts. nw.

Police said they were walking west on K st. and crossing 14th st. when they were hit by a cab being operated south on 14 st. by Elmon L. Smith, 25, of 18 Quincy pl. nw. Smith was charged with failing to yield the right of way to a pedestrian.

Tousignant, treated first at Emergency Hospital and then transferred to Walter Reed Hospital, suffered bilateral fractures of both legs and is in "fair condition." Miss Ferdinand is in "fair" condition at Emergency Hospital with a possible fractured pelvis.

Various Government Forms Explained at Fairfax Session

Just so there will be no misunderstanding in the minds of voters, the faults and advantages of the different forms of county government were outlined to a Fairfax County group last night.

Prof. John A. McIntire of George Washington University Law School, an authority on municipal and county government, discussed the different forms before an audience of about 40 at McLean, Va., at a meeting sponsored by the McLean School and Civic League.

The League has taken no stand on the form of government controversy in the county and has announced that it will not.

In a dispassionate manner, McIntire attempted to outline what confronts Fairfax County voters on November 7 when they go to the polls to decide whether they will (1) retain the present executive secretary form of government, (2) replace it with a county executive form, or (3) adopt a county manager system.

As an individual, McIntire said, he is an advocate of the manager principle in local government, believing that, basically, there should be a separation between the makers of policy and the administrators of that policy.

"It's been a rule," he said, "that in order to get good policy makers—elect; in order to get good executives—appoint."

McIntrie said the manager and executive forms of government both attempt to incorporate the manager principle. However, he did not try to influence his listeners toward either form.

Of the present system he said simply that it is doing "some kind of job" in Fairfax County, adding that he has heard almost unanimous praise of the individuals administering county affairs.

Meanwhile, proponents of change and those who want status quo maintained loudly debated the merits of the various forms.

The Fairfax County Better Government Committee declared it is a "political impossibility" for the county to get an elected school board through special legislation.

State Senator Andrew Clarke, who opposes the county manager plan, had suggested that as an alternative to the county manager plan, the county could seek special legislation, particularly to get an elected school board.

The Better Government Committee, of which John H. King is chairman, said that it is "surprising" that a man of Clarke's "political knowledge would suggest such a political impossibility."

The committee cited six efforts made to provide an elective school board either for Falls Church, Fairfax County or the State as a whole which have been made in the General Assembly and pointed out that all these had failed.

The committee said that Senator Clarke had participated in conferences which eliminated the elective school board section, and had served on committees which either killed such bills or failed to report them out.

"In the light of these facts," the committee stated, "Fairfax County voters can decide their chances of getting an elective school board through (a) Senator Clarke and (b) the General Assembly."

At a meeting of the Jefferson Village Citizens Association Monday night, W. Alvord Sherman, a member of the Fairfax County School Emergency Committee, warned that "The fight in Fairfax County is between those who want improvement in county government and those who want the status quo."

Sherman, who indorsed the county manager plan, also said the county's space increase in its school system is "static" and pointed out that the county now has 152 temporary classrooms, with enrollment increasing at the rate of eight new children per school day.

At a Tuesday night meting before the Hollin Halls School P-TA, William Barber, vice president of the committee to retain representative government in Fairfax County, declared that "county supervisors will immediately appoint a commission to draft a government to fit the county" if the November 7 referendum fails to indicate a desire for change.

Barber, a Franconia farmer, spoke in place of Arthur Schaffer, Mount Vernon district supervisor, who had been scheduled to address the group.

Speaking at the same meeting in favor of the county manager form of government, Mrs. Edward Macy, president of the County League of Women Voters, said that no authority in the field of public administration and county government will uphold the present form. Only one has been quoted by proponents of the county executive form, she said, declaring even he has said that his statements cannot be said to apply necessarily to Fairfax County.

THAT 3-INCH FRILL of lace which a London designer, in a seizure of pure inspiration, happily hem-stitched to the tennis panties of Gertrude Moran last year at Wimbledon, will begin paying off for Gorgeous Gussie this evening at Madison Square Garden.

In the 18 months since Gussie first heaved a thigh into her fancy-scanties and boggled the eyeballs of the Wimbledon clientele, she has practically littered the sports pages with her not-so-demure postures in tennis togs.

Povich

Helen Hull Jacobs, who first startled Wimbledon in 1933 by wearing shorts on the center court, causing lustily-lifted lorgnettes to be hastily dropped in confusion, was tennis' Gibson Girl compared to the attire Gussie affects. But against the risk that she might catch cold, Gussie has a $75,000 guarantee going for her on her pro tennis tour that starts tonight.

Promoter Bobby Riggs signed her at that figure to costar on the tour with Jack Kramer, Pauline Betz Addie and Pancho Segura, and Gussie who has an eye for business as well as fashions, will get 30 percent of all receipts over $250,000.

THE TROUPE moves down to Washington tomorrow night after its opening in New York, for a two-night stand at Uline Arena, in which La Moran will play singles against Mrs. P. B. Addie, and probably get licked. But that will be beside the point, of the tour at least. It was on the suspicion that the crowds would pay to glom the glamour of Gorgeous Gussie that Riggs agreed to post the 75G's guarantee.

Even in a news-print crisis that limited them to six pages per day, London newspapers found Gorgeous Gussie newsworthy. The London Daily Express slapped her picture on the front page five times in a week. Cairo's Journal de Egypt also recognized her black shorts as front-page material, though editorializing against the whole idea.

Gussie says she can't understand it. "I'm just a nice girl who plays tennis. Everything I do seems to get into the papers," she says plaintively. She hasn't plighted and broken a wedding troth for a couple of weeks now. All she has done is announce that she will wear three changes of underdress in her pro matches, including a leopard skin number that will knock the spots off whatever dignity remains in the game.

AMONG OTHER THINGS, she has taken on a manager, and Gussie says he says that he is going to incorporate her. "We're going to call it GAM, Inc., and he says it is an abbreviation for Gertrude A. Moran. Get it?" Gussie explains. "I understand it's a way to save taxes, or something."

Funny thing, and perhaps it should be remembered, Gussie is a pretty good tennis player. She was bumped off early at Wimbledon, but she wasn't training seriously for that test. She went to the semifinals of the National singles last year, and won the National indoor title. She took a set from Pauline Betz back in the 1946 Nationals and two years later upset third-seeded Doris Hart in straight sets to reach the semifinals.

Pauline Addie was talking about that the other day and saying, "Gussie will beat me, if I am not careful, and I will have to be pretty good to beat her. Gussie belongs in the first five of women's tennis."

Mrs. Addie, who is no mean candidate in the glamor department herself, does not intend to try to out-bedazzle Gussie. "That is orders from my husband," she says.

WHEN THE GALS are not having at each other, the customers will be watching probably the best tennis in the world. Riggs is presenting Jack Kramer against Pancho Segura in the men's singles, and the little man from Ecuador is the only tennis player in the business with the ability to handle Kramer's cannon-ball serve.

Kramer and Segura will be levelling, too. It's Segura's chance to move Kramer out of the top-money bracket on the pro tours. For the past couple of seasons, Segura has been along for the ride, a glorified sort of ball-boy, who filled out the tour at $250 a week while Kramer and Gonzales and Parker were getting the big money.

But the last couple of times they've met, in Paris and in the United States pro tennis finals, Segura has taken Kramer. His smashing two-hand returns of Kramer's serves have knocked the props from under the one advantage Kramer had, and Segura could wind up as the man who gets the big guarantee next year. Anyway, that's what he has in mind.

Losing Irish Now Underdogs

NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (AP).—Notre Dame will be an underdog in a football game this weekend for the first time in five years.

Photographer Dodges Play, Throws Block Into Herman Ball, Now He's All Balled Up

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

THE ONLY REDSKIN who won't be in tip-top physical shape for Sunday's clash with the Eagles in Philadelphia is Head Coach Herman Ball. He's a mass of bruises, suffered last Sunday when a photographer plowed into him fleeing from play near the sidelines . . . The only pass North Carolina State threw against Maryland last Saturday—a 15-yarder which set up State's second touchdown—was caught out of bounds, game movies show, but the Terps aren't complaining because End Pete Augsberger was out of the end zone when he caught Jack Scarbath's pass for Maryland's second touchdown, the same movies show . . . Senator-elect Willis Smith, of North Carolina, has invited Charlie Justice, of the Redskins, to be a member of his staff here in Washington. Smith defeated Senator Frank Graham, who was president of North Carolina University before being appointed to the Senate.

Tom Powers

IF COACH Wallace Wade, of Duke, had heeded stories appearing in the Duke University campus paper two years ago, he would have had a star on his hands in Tom Powers in 1948. Powers, 185-pound halfback from Cumberland, Md., was the star of Duke's intramural football league for two years and only because Ted Mann, Duke publicity director, insisted he report for varsity football, did he go out. Today, he's Duke's leading scorer and one of the boys Maryland must stop Saturday if the Terps are to beat the Dukes at Durham . . . The Maryland-Duke clash, incidentally, is only one of only four in the Carolina area that day. Twelve miles from Durham, North Carolina meets William and Mary in a homecoming tussle; 50 miles distant, at Winston-Salem, unbeaten Clemson meets unbeaten Wake Forest; and 23 miles away, at Raleigh, North Carolina State, now living high since its upset of Maryland last week, clashes with winless Virginia Tech at night.

NAVY'S UPSET of Southern California last Saturday was well-received on the East and West coasts. It boosted the Atlantic seaboard's football prestige and at the same time gained respect for the coaching ability of Navy's Eddie Erdelatz in California, where he was born . . . The departure of Howie Livingston from the Redskins to the San Francisco '49ers went unmoaned by both Livingston, a defensive halfback, and the Redskins. Livingston, a Californian, wanted to play on the West Coast and the Redskins were not exactly in love with his performances this season . . . Rice replaces Tulane on the 1951 and 1952 Navy schedule. Also, either Ohio State or Minnesota will replace Northwestern next year . . . Maryland has won the toss in four of its five games this season which means Terps Cocaptains Jake Rowden and Ray Krouse are $2 apiece wealthier because the captain who wins gets the silver dollar used for the flip of the coin . . . With Bucknell and Lafayette already on the 1951 program, Georgetown is dickering for another tough football foe next year—Richmond University.

Post, TD Club Help Sponsor Highs Title Game Nov. 22

The Interhigh Football Championship Game will take place Wednesday night, November 22, at Griffith Stadium with The Washington Post again joining in the sponsorship with the Board of Education.

For the first time, the Touchdown Club, Washington's most generous sports welfare association, is also collaborating in putting over the top high school event of the year.

All proceeds of the game will go to buy much needed athletic equipment for the nine high schools in division I-IX.

Champions of Eastern and West-Division of the Interhigh League will play in the big game. It's still a wide open race for the championships berths with Eastern, Anacostia and Western fighting it out in the Eastern Division, and McKinley Tech and Coolidge battling it out in the Western.

In 1946, The Post's first year of participation, Coolidge beat Tech, 18-6, before 18,571 fans, the largest crowd ever to see a scholastic event here.

Bobby Rohr scored all three touchdowns for Coolidge, and on that Tech team were Bugs Thompson, now a Georgetown star; Glenn Smith, Clemson's star end, and Clarence Drayer, a first line tackle at George Washington. Proceeds of more than $20,000 were netted for the Children's Hospital.

Next year, Tech, previously unscored on, yielded a touchdown to Central, but won, 14-7, before 16,641, the second largest schoolboy sports crowd. Central's star that year was Jim Pantos.

In 1948, Central went undefeated so no championship game was required. But last year, more than 10,000 braved a freak autumn snowstorm to see Wilson beat Tech, 21-20.

Phil Rizzuto And Konstanty 'Players of '50'

NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—Mr. Durability and Mr. Reliability—Jim Konstanty and Phil Rizzuto—today won the United Press "Player of the Year" awards for the manner in which they set the pennant winning pace for the Philadelphia Phillies and the New York Yankees.

Rizzuto, the littlest guy in the American League, was named on 18 out of 24 ballots for his rally wrecking play at shortsop, while Konstanty, the ever-ready relief pitcher who sets a modern record by working in 74 games for the Phillies, received 15 votes.

Rizzuto, who had a dull day if he didn't rob three or four batters of base hits, had the widest range of any major league shortstop.

His fielding was so spectacular his hitting was often overlooked, yet he wound up with the best average of any Yankee. A shining .324, which was 49 points better than his lifetime mark of .275.

The only other players considered in the American League were Boston's Mr. Versatility, Billy Goodman, the utility star who also won the league batting championship, and Yogi Berra, the Yankee catcher. Each received three votes.

Stan (The Man) Musial of the Cardinals, who has been the big man in his league on several past occasions, drew three votes for his winning of the National League batting title again, while Pepperhead Eddie Stanky, the second baseman who switched descriptions of the New York Giants from mediocre to excellent, also was named on three ballots. Shortstop Granny Hamner of the Phillies received two votes and First Baseman and Dodger home-run pace-setter, Gil Hodges, picked up one.

South Carolina, GW No Longer 'Have-Nots'

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

When George Washington and South Carolina clash in G. W.'s homecoming game Friday night at the ballpark, about 10,000 fans will see two of the Southern Conference's most improved teams.

A year ago, the Gamecocks were a one-man team—Steve Wadiak, and were able to win only three games in ten. Already, they've beaten Georgia Tech and Furman and tied undefeated Clemson.

In three years under Coach Bo Rowland, the Colonials have developed their "fightin' 15" into practically two full-blown platoons, and this season, they've won three out of five.

After last week's 13-0 setback at Wake Forest, G. W.'s coaching staff was particularly proud of its defensive team.

Wake Forest reputedly had the best defensive outfit in the conference, yet unsung G. W. played the Demon Deacons on almost

Rocky Is All Business

By Red Smith

GREENWOOD LAKE, N. Y., Oct. 25 (NYHT). There was blood on Rocky Graziano's white T-shirt. Not his blood. The first time he leaped at Joe Diliberto, thrusting out a left jab that was not especially graceful and not especially gentle, he had brought blood from the sparring partner's nose.

Red Smith

After that he had four rounds of first-class roughhousing with Diliberto and Freddie Menna.

He looked mean and angry at such times, but when the sparring was finished he danced around the ring, shadow-boxing. He thwacked both his partners loudly on the shoulders with an open palm, a genial patron saluting the help. He took one round on the big bag, two on the light bag, then stretched out on a mat and did nip-ups and leg exercises. Training for his return match with Tony Janiro in Madison Square Garden tomorrow night.

Graziano looked as he always does in the gym. He never spars, he always fights, moving in and taking punches to throw his heavy, swinging blows. When his work was done, he was as fresh as when it started. His condition seemed superb.

"I feel wonderful," he said, " coulda done ten more rounds easy. I been training steady now for seven weeks solid, which I never trained more than three weeks before this, even for a championship fight. I'll take this kid easy this time. What the hell, he's got nothing to hurt you. Won't be a contest.

"I'll be looking for a knockout," he said.

He's always looking for a knockout. Last time he met Janiro they boxed a draw and Rocky, disgusted with his performance, said he guessed he liked the little so-and-so too well.

"Do you still like the little bad name too much, Rocky?"

"Not this time," he said.

"I guess this training is good for you, maybe," he said, as if making a discovery. "And I've been fighting, which is better than any training. Chicago, Milwaukee, Buffalo. They treat me wonderful in them towns.

"In them towns they give me big spaghetti dinners and all, 200 people, you know, I'd rather fight out-of-town than home now."

He grinned. "I never though I'd say that. I always wanted my friends around me. Like the night I beat Billy Arnold in the Garden, President Truman was there, which he ain't such a bad guy. He wasn't President then. Vice President, well, it's a good win for me over Arnold and all my mob is around me and somebody says they want a picture of me and the Vice President. I says, "The hell with that, here's the mob I wants be with."

"I didn't mean nothing, and now I could of had a picture with the President. A fighter to have his picture with the

GEORGETOWN AND VILLANOVA will do next Saturday's football centerpiece in the Washington area in their game at Griffith Stadium.

A basis of comparison is provided in the Tulsa-Georgetown and Tulsa-Villanova games. Tulsa beat Georgetown by 21-7, and Tulsa beat Villanova by 27-7.

The winner of this week's contest will receive two tickets to the Army-Penn game in Philadelphia, November 4, as well as first-class, round-trip transportation for two persons.

Contest Rules

THE CONTEST each week will include 20 major college games. The contestant will select the winner (or tie) in each of these games. There will also be a twenty-first game for which the contestant must give the "Probable Score," to be considered by the contest judges only in case two or more persons tie on the first 20 games.

All entries must be in the hands of the Football Contest Editor not later than 3 p. m. Friday of each week. Entries should be left at the Service Counter in the lobby of The Washington Post Bldg., 1337 E St. N. W.

The person submitting the most accurate entry each week shall be declared the winner. In case of ties, all persons sharing in the tie will receive duplicate awards.

The decisions of the judges will be final.

Entries submitted must be legible, with the selections listed in the order they are announced in The Washington Post.

Entries may be handwritten or typewritten. However, carbon copies and mimeographed copies or copies made by any other duplicating machine will NOT be accepted. You may submit as many entries as you wish.

No employe of The Washington Post or member of his immediate family is eligible to participate in this contest.

No person will be eligible to win the weekly contest twice.

Which Way Does Rickey Head Now?

NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (AP).—An involved deal and a section of small print in the major league rules rose up today to confuse Branch Rickey's future in baseball.

It was learned today that Rickey in disposing of his 25 percent stock in the Brooklyn club, agreed to accept the $1,025,000 purchase price in installment payments covering a ten-and-a-half year period.

Major league Rule 20 reads:

"No club or stockholder or official of a club shall, directly or indirectly, own stock or have any financial interest in any other club in its league."

The major league rule could be circumvented by Rickey's selling his rights to the debt to a bank or through discounted notes. This way Rickey could step completely out of the Brooklyn picture.

Rickey has been reported headed for an executive role with the Pittsburgh Pirates, whose owner, John W. Galbreath, is a long time friend. Other rumors have had him buying into the St. Louis Browns.

But the signing of Zack Taylor to manage the Browns again next year indicates that Rickey probably will not go to that club. Rickey likes to pick his own pilots. Zeckendorf would receive a $50,000 consideration from Rickey, providing the parties in the "stock agreement" exercised their option on Rickey's stock.

Phantom Raider, owned by Dr. and Mrs. Alvin I. Kay, Bethesda, Md., placed third in the same class. Goldwich, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Alex Calvert, Warrenton, Va., was second in the working hunter appointment class.

Washington Pulls Away In 3d Period To Triumph

Special Dispatch to The Post

BALTIMORE, Oct. 25.—Rookie Bill Sharman of Southern California, piled in 24 points to lead the Washington Capitols to a 78-72 exhibition pro basketball victory over the Baltimore Colts tonight.

It was the first game of the season for Bones McKinney's Caps and the third pre-season game for the Bullets.

The Caps led most of the way, but the Bullets tied it at 58-58 midway the third period, chiefly on the hot-hand of veteran Paul Hoffman, who scored 20 points to be runner-up to Sharman for high-scoring honors.

But the Caps, led by Sharman and Don Otten, rallied with an eight-point flurry toward the end of the period and held their lead the rest of the way.

Caps, Bullets Play In Benefit Here Tonight

The professional basketball season bows into Washington tonight with the Touchdown Club-sponsored exhibition doubleheader at Uline Arena at 7:45 o'clock.

In the first game, the New York Knickerbockers play the Philadelphia Warriors, and in the nightcap, the Washington Caps tackle the Baltimore Bullets. Proceeds will go to the Touchdown Club welfare fund. WWDC will broadcast the Caps' game at 9:05 p. m.

Irish May Need 'Revitalizing', President Says

DES MOINES, Oct. 25 (AP).—Notre Dame's football offense "may need a little revitalizing," the Rev. John J. Cavanaugh, president of the University of Notre Dame, said here today.

"Kids all over the country are becoming pretty familiar with the 'T,' and I think most of the T's are a bit weaker than before," Father Cavanaugh observed.

The Notre Dame president in an interview had this to say about the current poor Irish season with two losses to date:

"We are not reconciling ourselves to a period of losses."

Father Cavanaugh asserted, however, that "we'll probably be beaten by two or three touchdowns this week" when Notre Dame plays Michigan State.

He reported Notre Dame still wants to play Army and Michigan, and added that he "definitely" thinks the Cadets' series with Notre Dame will be resumed.

Referring to the need for revitalizing the offense, Father Cavanaugh cited the record of the late Knute Rockne.

"Rock became Notre Dame's head coach in 1918 and had good teams until 1928, when he lost four. Then he juiced up his offense a bit and lost none in either 1929 or 1930."

DEAR FOLKS: AT LAUREL

The Maryland Racing Writers Association is conducting its annual poll to determine the best Maryland-bred horse of the year to be honored at the turf writers' dinner November 6. Nominated are Loser Weeper, Double Brandy, Pilaster, Tenure, Tuscany and Family. Kent Miller's Elkridge, bred by Joseph F. Flannagan, was the 1949 winner, Augustino Catalano, the current jockey sensation, will ride next winter in Florida, he says. Charles Town and Laurel have something in common besides the fact that the Yankee dollar is used at both places. The texture of the soil on the running surfaces is almost identical. Laurel assembled the dirt and mixed it, using a definite formula. Charles Town simply had to haul it to the track from a Shenandoah River bank where Mother Nature had done the mixing job. BILL.

Gilmer Third Best Passer In Pro League

Although they're last in the American Conference of the National Football League, the Redskins are among the leaders in a couple of offensive departments, official statistics yesterday showed.

Quarterback Harry Gilmer has the third best passing percentage in the league with 36 completions in 85 attempts for 691 yards. He's thrown seven touchdown passes.

End Bones Taylor, who scored three times on passes from Gilmer last Sunday against the Chicago Cardinals, has scored 42 points—seven touchdowns—and is the league's fourth best.

The Los Angeles Rams, third in the American division, lead in total defense with 2627 yards, with 1781 picked up through the air and 846 on the ground.

Rookie Zollie Toth of the New York Giants retained his hold on the No. 1 spot in ground gaining. The former Louisiana State star has gained 378 yards on 70 attempts, although sidelined for a week by injuries. His average is 5.4 yards.

even terms. Two third-quarter interceptions were responsible for Wake Forest's two winning touchdowns.

What makes the G.W. coaches so happy is the fact that five of the defensive regulars are sophomores, who'll be around for some time. Four others are juniors and two are seniors.

In the defensive line are sophs Frank Continetti, Jim England, Bob Gutt and Tom Flyzik while one of the defensive halfbacks is soph George Semkew. It's hard to call G.W.'s defensive linemen tackles or guards or ends because they're always shifting around.

Kelling Wins In Sweeps Race

NEWMARKET, England, Oct. 25 (AP)—Kelling, a colt that had steadily lost favor with the public, stuck his long neck in front in a three-horse photo finish today to win the 109th running of the Cambridgeshire Stakes.

An Irish sweepstakes drawing was held on the race.

Sorrentino Also Banned; Trainer Fined

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

LAUREL, Oct. 25.—Two jockeys were suspended and a trainer was fined by local stewards, it was announced today. Jockey Edward Campbell was the hardest hit by the three rulings, having been set down for 10 days, thus being denied the mount on Lewis Shaw's Abstract in the Pimlico Special on November 3.

Campbell had two charges of rough riding against him, both as the result of action on last Monday's program. In the fifth race he was accused of roughing with W. W. Watters' Four Chances, a filly who set the pace and finished in third position.

Again in the seventh race, Campbell is alleged to have carried out and otherwise bothering Mrs. James McGee's Sketch, the favorite. Thunder-Jet, Campbell's Mount, won the race, but was disqualified and placed second behind Sketch.

Beat Dart on Abstract

In addition to riding several other longshots here, Campbell was aboard Abstract in the Colt's sensational upset of Dart By Double Brandy, Pilaster and others in last Saturday's Washington Handicap. This victory earned the 4-year-old an invitation to the Special.

Disciplined along with Campbell, was Jockey Mike Sorrentino, who was prominent in Maryland half-mile racing but little more than "another rider" since action returned to the major tracks.

Sorrentino was charged with failure to keep Mrs. C. M. Greer, Jr.'s Heaven Hills straight through the stretch in last Monday's second race the mare swerved several times in the final straightaway before finishing second to W. C. Ensor's Ned's Polly.

Enters Illegal Horse

Trainer W. G. Christmas was fined $25 for entering horses which are ineligible under the association rules, designed to ban cheap horses.

Owner-Erainer Louis Hurwitz of Washington saddled two winners on today's card. He took the fourth with G. A. Sacks' Sylmady, a $12.60 shot ridden by Apprentice Thomas Fortune and the fifth with his own Marketing, paying $12.40 and piloted by Apprentice Gerald Champagne.

The crowd of 9979 and betting of $749,955 was the best day's business, with the exception of Saturday, since the State's fall season opened.

Army Dept. Statistician Rates Teams by TV Picks 17 Out of 20 Teams to Win Contest

An Army Department statistician, a former national horizontal bar champion, is this week's Washington Post Pick-the-Winner Football Contest winner.

He is Norman Boardman of 4322 Fourth st., Arlington, who picked the winner in 17 out of 20 games last weekend.

Among the upsets which he called were North Carolina State over Maryland, Navy over Southern California, and Indiana over Notre Dame.

By winning, Boardman is entitled to two tickets and first-class round-trip transportation for two persons to this Saturday's Maryland-Duke game in Durham, N. C.

This week's contest was the first entered by Boardman this year. He entered several times last year, but didn't come close.

"The difference," says Boardman, "is that I have a television set now, and know my football a lot better. For example I could see that Notre Dame wasn't up to par, and picked it to lose. And I could see that Navy was better than its record, so I thought last week would be a winner for Eddie Erdelatz."

NORMAN BOARDMAN

Boardman, 35, and a native of Philadelphia, was the only one to pick 17 out of 20. Eleven other entrants picked 16 out of 20.

Boardman unfortunately picked Alabama over Tennessee, Vanderbilt over Florida and Iowa State over Missouri. He didn't miss by far in the Missouri game; it turned out a tie.

Boardman has been living in Arlington since the war. He was stationed here with the Army and stayed on after he was mustered out. He has been married six years.

"I'm putting on a lot of weight as a result," says Boardman. "I used to weigh around 160 when I was national horizontal bar champion at Temple in the 1930s. I also kept in trim by cheerleading. But I'm up to 185 now, married life, you know."

President of the United States, that's something."

He sounded wistful.

"Have you been doing all right since you were reinstated?"

"You mean finances? Better than before. Maybe God's on my side. To be able to come back and make the kind of money I'm making after all that, it makes me feel good. Why, we go into Milwaukee and do $56,000 in a little town like that. And up there along the bay—Lake Michigan. Beautiful."

Baxter (Hard) on TV

Laverne Baxter silenced Telecaster Jim Gibbons and then pinned Ken Ackles with a body press after 16 minutes of their wrestling match at Turner's Arena last night. Baxter crashed on the TV table at ringside after being tossed by Ackles and put Gibbons off the air for a few moments.

The Federal Diary

Civil Service to Urge Wage-Fixing Changes In Classification Act

The Civil Service Commission will recommend these changes in the salary-fixing Classification Act,

1. That an estimated 80,000 persons in crafts, trades and laborers jobs now under the Crafts, Protective and Custodial Service (CPC) be transferred out of the Classification Act and their salaries be fixed hereafter by local wage boards, and,

2. That guards, firefighters and messengers, now under the CPC service, be transferred to the general service provisions of the Classification Act. There are an estimated 40,000 workers in these categories.

The recommendations will go to Congress shortly after it returns late next month. If approved by Congress, they will simplify wage-fixing in Defense General Services and other agencies. Also, they're likely to result in wage boosts for the per diem employes in trade and craft jobs.

And Congress is expected to okay the suggestions. In fact, a report issued a year ago by the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee proposed that most CPC employes be placed under local wage boards for salary-fixing purposes.

STORY: An anonymous Federal worker sent me: "The Prayer of The Federal Employe" which follows:

"Our Father, which art in Congress, grant that we be well paid, that our holidays come to pass, that our job be done by others, on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily rest. Forgive us our indolence as we forgive those who make us work. Encourage our increase and deliver us from Reorganization. Amen!"

LOYALTY: The President's Federal employe loyalty program will be changed very little by the creation of the five-man Subversive Activities Control Board.

The Wood-McCarran Act, under which the board will operate, makes it illegal for any member of a subversive organization to seek, accept, or to hold a Federal job. In addition, all such members are supposed to register or else face jail sentences.

The President's loyalty board will keep close tab on all persons who register or are required to register under the law. If any Federal employes are among them, the loyalty board will accept that as sufficient evidence to order their immediate firings. Furthermore, Federal job applicants will be checked against the list. Those who are on it will be blackballed from Government service. The new law could prove to be helpful to the loyalty board.

FSA: Rufus E. Miles, jr., has been appointed assistant administrator for defense activities of the Federal Security Agency. His is another promotion of a career civil servant to a top Federal job, and a very good one, too. He transfers from the Budget Bureau where he was chief of the labor and welfare branch of the estimates division. At FSA, he'll be responsible for coordinating these health, education, and welfare functions identified with national defense.

NOTES: Bill Batt, jr., a Labor Department official, is rounding up Pennsylvanians here to return to their State on November 7 to vote in the congressional elections. You can arrange a ride by calling National 8633 . . . The independent National Federation of Federal Employes has moved into its new headquarters at 1729 G st. nw. . . . Civil Service is accepting applications for junior scientist, engineer, and management assistant. Also for stereotyper and electrotyper jobs . . . The full membership of the Civil Service committee of the District Bar Association is: Philip P. Marenberg, chairman; Thurman Arnold, John R. Benney, Wallace M. Cohen, Samuel H. Jaffe, James J. McCabe, Robert N. Miller and Jack Wasserman.

WHITTEN RIDER: A few Federal employes are reported to have refused grade promotions because they must now be made on a temporary basis under the Whitten rider. They should consider this rule: Any employe who is given a grade promotion and is later demoted to his old grade may have all the time served in that grade credited toward an in-grade promotion. In general, a demotion has no effect on in-grade waiting periods.

George Mason Once Charged With Debt, Old Records Show

The Washington Post

HISTORIC PAPERS—Ann Lawson, 21, of 1310 N. Court House rd., Arlington, Va., an employe at the Arlington County Court House, examines one of the old record books

By Don Olesen
Post Reporter

The pecadillos of the prominent, the petty, and the pilfering gentry of nearby Virginia 150 years ago were unmercifully bared in Arlington yesterday.

These ancestral capers were brought to light by discovery of thousands of old court records in four locked, forgotten closets in the County Court House.

What happened was this: Somebody wanted to install a new telephone line in the third-floor zoning office. The cabinets were in the way.

Solution? Workmen broke the paint-encrusted lock off one closet door—and there were the documents, covered with dust so thick you could barely read the beautiful, rolling hand script on them.

Reporters who braved sneeze-provoking clouds of dust to read the court records found items like these:

From an Alexandria Hustings Court order dated February 6, 1787: The court sergeant is "hereby commanded to take George Mason and him safely keep, so that you have his body" before the court to satisfy a debt of 6 pounds he owed to "Smith and Douglas."

George Mason, prominent Virginia statesman and author of the Virginia Declaration of Rights, apparently settled his debt out of court.

There was a criminal warrant against a Henry Nicholson, accused by William Reynolds of trespassing and "assault and battery damage," and dated 1797.

And a civil judgment against Andrew McMasters for a debt of "3 pounds, 16 shillings and 8 pence," plus "93 pounds of tobacco" owed another man in the same year.

An Alexandria Hustings Court docket dated 1816 has these listings: Levi Pickering found not guilty of "keeping a disorderly house"; Benjamin Morgan indicted for "stealing a horse"; a not guilty verdict on "Negro George" for burglary.

Court documents carried still-familiar Arlington-Alexandria names like Veitch, Ball, Chew, Hedrick, Ramsey, Fillmore and Carlin.

P. S.: The new telephone line wasn't installed yesterday. Workmen, eyeing the dust, balked for the time being.

DeMarco Gets 2-Year Term In Jewel Theft

Joseph DeMarco, 30-year-old New York City electrician, yesterday was given a two-year sentence in Arlington Circuit Court for stealing an Arlington widow's jewelry.

During the trial, DeMarco—who police said has several years of legal training—acted as his own attorney.

Taking the witness stand in his own behalf, he admitted the charge against him "is true" and said he had made "a great error."

But he told the 12-man jury he had "still risked his life and limb" to try and return the jewels to the widow, Mrs. Juanita Cassidy of 3137 Key blvd., Arlington. "Sometimes justice is wrong," DeMarco said.

Detectives George Coppage and Lieut. John Sanders testified the jewels—valued by police at $5000—were stolen from Mrs. Cassidy's home September 7 after DeMarco met the widow on a train trip. Mrs. Cassidy has valued the jewels at $500.

When police arrested the electrician two days later, they said he gave them the key to a deposit box in Union Station where the jewelry was found, wrapped in brown paper bearing Mrs. Cassidy's name and address.

Everett Harris of the Lyon Village Apartments, Arlington, Mrs. Cassidy's son, testified DeMarco telephoned him after the robbery and "had indicated some willingness to return" the jewelry.

Sears Plans Store on Naylor Rd.

Sears, Roebuck & Co. plans soon to build its first store in Southeast Washington at Denver st. and Naylor rd.

The District Board of Zoning Adjustment cleared the only major obstacle yesterday by permitting use of property on the north side of Denver st. between Naylor rd. and 30th st. as a parking lot for 900 cars. Building site and parking lot combined cover about 7 acres.

Hugh K. Duffield, general manager for Sears in the Washington area, said the company has an option on the property and will probably buy now that parking facilities have been assured. It was understood construction will start in the spring, but Duffield said that is not yet definite.

The zoning board also approved parking lots at two other sites. Ford Enterprises, Inc., was given permission to establish a lot at 1408-16 17th st. nw. where a spokesman said 70 cars could be parked after existing buildings are razed. Garfield I. Kass said he intends to provide facilities for 90 cars at 501 25th st. nw.

Grandmother's Fear Keeps Wounded Child Unattended

A 2-year-old boy lay in his bed in Prince William County, Va., for 12 hours before his parents discovered a bullet wound in his shoulder at 4 a. m. yesterday and rushed him to Arlington Hospital.

The boy, James Walker, was wounded when his brother, Robert Lee Walker, 7, accidentally discharged a .22-caliber rifle. He was reported in satisfactory condition at the hospital.

The shooting occurred at about 4 p. m. Tuesday at the Walker home on Route 211, 2 miles south of Gainesville, Va.

According to Mrs. Lou Downey, grandmother of the boys, James and Robert—two of eight Walker children—were playing in the yard outside when she heard the crack of the rifle.

Mrs. Downey said she put James to bed immediately and was too frightened to tell his parents what had happened when they returned from work. The father, Charles Walker, a bricklayer, is employed in Falls Church.

The 2-year-old began to cry at about 4 a. m. When his parents investigated they discovered the wound.

Trade School Probers Call Work in Vain

14 on Committee Charge Minority's Report Followed Insufficient Inquiry

A majority of the committee set up 15 months ago to investigate private GI trade schools here told the District Commissioners yesterday that their work had been utterly valueless.

"Because of the uncooperative, supercilious and arbitrary attitude of the chairman and several other members of the committee . . . no investigation worthy of the name was conducted . . .," 14 members stated in a written report.

They drew no conclusions on the charges that the 30 or so schools are giving inadequate training to veterans and turning out many more graduates than the market can absorb.

The report did suggest, however, that the Board of Education "re-evaluate its present standards of approval" in cooperation with local employers in the various trades. The Board of Education must approve each trade school.

The statement was an answer to a report last winter clearing the trade schools, signed by Committee Chairman Leon Chatelain, jr. and only six other members. The city heads took no action on it, but said they would be glad to hear from members holding different views.

The persons who signed yesterday's report included one who had resigned and his replacement. Most signers represented labor or veteran groups or the District Apprenticeship Council. Total membership of the committee varied from 18 to 21 .

In a separate letter two signers of the report took issue with the "notion" that the schools help in the mobilization of labor for war production. The opposite is true, they said.

James W. Lumsden, representing Disabled American Veterans, and Robert E. Phelps, secretary-treasurer of the Phelps-Roberts Corp., wrote:

". . . the GI trade schools in the D. C. area alone are keeping . . . more than 6000 from being available for war production jobs, creating a tight labor market, and grievously hamstringing the war effort.

"Furthermore, the war has not increased the demand for watchmakers . . . It is apparent that, in the case of the present international situation . . . these schools continue to waste both manpower and money to no apparent purpose or benefit."

C. U. Law School Alumni Reelect Officers

The Law School Alumni Association of the Catholic University of America reelected officers Saturday, it was announced yesterday by the dean of the school, Dr. Brendon F. Brown.

Those reelected were: Lewis L. Guarnieri, president, Warren, Ohio; Michael G. Luddy, vice president, Los Angeles, Calif., and Mrs. Amelia Mustato Sommer, secretary-treasurer, Washington.

Bond Called as Marine Fails To Appear in Kneeing Case

Judge Ellen K. Raedy issued an attachment for Strong, after he failed to appear in court to stand trial for assaulting Pvt. E. E. Proudfoot.

Strong has been free since July under $300 bond. Judge Raedy ordered the bond forfeited yesterday. Bondsman James Conroy paid the $300 and promised to make every effort to produce Strong, who is reportedly attending Columbia University in New York.

At that time Proudfoot was told that Strong had changed his plea to guilty and had been allowed to forfeit $50 collateral.

Proudfoot, who spent six days in the hospital and three weeks on sick leave as a result of the incident, said he had been "put in the middle" when he was asked if he was sure he wanted to prosecute Strong. On the Strong case folder of Prosecutor Alfred Hantman, it was also noted that Strong had been allowed to forfeit $50 collateral.

When reporters went looking for Judge Ready to find out why Strong had been allowed to forfeit collateral, it was learned that she had adjourned court hastily in response to a scribbled message from Assistant United States Attorney Thomas Wadden that "fireworks" were imminent.

When reporters did question Judge Raedy, she said her ruling had been misunderstood and that she actually had continued the case for one week.

Myron G. Ehrlich, Strong's lawyer, first asked Judge Raedy yesterday to continue the case until December 3. She refused. Ehrlich then asked for permission to withdraw from the case, saying that Strong had refused to follow his advice.

Judge Raedy granted Ehrlich permission but called for Conroy. He asked for a week's continuance, but Judge Raedy again refused.

4 New Cases Increase Polio Total to 390

In the District, three new cases increased the city's total to 164 as against 96 at this time last year. The District Health Department said new cases included:

Arlington County reported its thirty-third case of the year—a 15-year-old girl of the 1000 block of N. Aberdeen st., who was admitted to the Fort Belvoir base hospital on October 11.

18 Georgetown Plans Accepted By Arts Board

Macomber Heads New Group to Check On All Alterations

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

The Fine Arts Commission, newly named custodian of old Georgetown architecture, yesterday announced its first approval of plans for altering buildings in the area.

Eighteen of 19 projects submitted were okayed. They ranged from routine repair and alteration jobs to installation of an oil burner in a church and fences around private property.

At the same time, the commission disclosed appointment of a new board of review to screen all proposed construction, alteration, reconstruction or razing of any building in Georgetown.

Macomber Heads Unit

The three-man board of review is under the chairmanship of W. M. Macomber, architect of the Mount Vernon Estate and consultant for the restoration of Williamsburg, Va.

Other members are Lorenzo S. Winslow, architect of the White House, and William Dewey Foster, local architect who helped design the new State Department building and has done considerable work in Georgetown.

The review board met nearly all-day Tuesday in its first meeting which resulted in organizing procedures and passing upon the first group of projects.

The new act requires the Fine Arts Commission (actually its board of review) to study and send its opinion to the District Commissioners on all plans for new construction and alteration to buildings in Georgetown.

The fine arts group, fully aware of the huge new job it has on its hands, announced it planned to meet at least once a week to pass upon building plans.

As its first action, the group made clear it did not want to delay architects by new procedures. And to this end, it urged architects to submit plans at their earliest stages, especially blueprints for large projects, a spokesman said.

"This will enable the board of review and commission to give constructive criticism without incurring inconvenience or financial loss to the architects," the commission said.

"To revive interest in old Georgetown, both architectually and historically, will be the aim of the Board of Review in passing on plans submitted under this unique act."

Permission was granted to install an oil burner in a church at 1334 27th st.; for store alterations at 1901 Wisconsin ave. repairs to another store at 1302 Wisconsin ave.; fences around 31 3017 N st. and 3069 Canal st., and an outdoor sign at 1218 Wisconsin ave.

2 Death Car Riders Who Fled Held With Driver

Both Are Charged With Compounding Felony in Accident Fatal to Laborer

A coroner's jury held two men yesterday in connection with traffic deaths, and, police said, for the first time in District history held death-car passengers on charges of compounding a felony.

Hilliard R. Johnson, 33, 1014 4th st. nw., was ordered held on a charge of manslaughter. He was the driver of a car which crashed through two barricades at North Capitol and H sts. Tuesday and killed Albert A. Harris, 54, a Water Department employe of McLean, Va.

The two passengers in Johnson's car were arrested at the D. C. Morgue after the inquest, and Assistant United States Attorney Frank H. Strickler said they were being held for arraignment in Mu-Water Department employe of compounding a felony.

The passengers are Jazelle Moon, 27, 617 Elliott st. ne. and Julius A. Hopkins jr., 31 48 H st. ne. They ran from the scene of Harris' death after the accident, police said.

Johnson testified that he "blacked out" as he hit the first barricade at 1 p. m. He said he had had only one beer earlier in the day.

Pvt. Horace Carmichael of the Traffic Division's Accident Investigation Unit, however, testified that tests taken immediately after the accident showed that Johnson had an alcoholic content of .35. Deputy Coroner Dr. Richard Rosenberg testified that this was "a marked degree of intoxication." A man is considered under the influence with an alcoholic content of .15, he testified.

In another inquest, the coroner's jury held Fred B. Johnson, 42, 4413 Chestnut st., Bethesda, on a charge of negligent homicide, in connection with the July 26 traffic death of Mrs. Frances Sherry, 18.

Sandy's Stroll Creates a Fuss In Hamm Home

At 2:30 p. m., Sandy Hamm, who was supposed to be playing in the yard behind her home at 2729 Connecticut ave. nw., wasn't. Her mother, Mrs. Gene Hamm, called police. Her father, Chief Radioman Douglas Hamm, attached to the Navy Department, joined the search.

A lookout was broadcast for a 3½-year-old girl in blue jeans and a red sweater. At 4:45 p. m., Sergt. C. Robert Murphy and Pvt. J. W. Peters noticed the colorful outfit in the 4500 block of Connecticut ave.

WORLD AFFAIRS

TEST NO. 3

The Program of Information on World Affairs is sponsored by The Washington Post to promote popular interest in events of world significance. As a part of the Program The Washington Post publishes each Thursday of the school year a test on one of 26 topics of world affairs. The Program makes it possible for school children, adult groups and individuals to measure their knowledge of world affairs. It also includes a guidebook with study outlines on the 26 topics. The Program is directed by J. Edward Gerald, University of Minnesota Professor of Journalism, under guidance of Edgar B. Wesley, University Professor of Education.

Answers will be printed in The Post on Saturday. Some of the test questions may involve degrees of correctness rather than indisputable facts. In such cases select the BEST answer.

Next Week's Topic: The United Nations as a Force for Peace

W. L. Ayers, International Bank Man, Dies

Mr. Ayers

Mr. Ayers was 52 years old. He lived at 6011 33d st. nw.

Mr. Ayers was first stricken on August 28 while on board the liner Queen Elizabeth, en route to the annual meeting of the International Bank's board of governors at Paris.

He was appointed director of the public relations department of the International Bank on November 1, 1949. He had first joined the bank as a consultant to that department on February 1, 1948, and was appointed assistant director of the department in October of that year.

Mr. Ayers had been in newspaper and public relations work for more than 35 years, and was widely known in newspaper and financial circles in New York, Chicago and Washington. His newspaper career began when he was 15 years old, and five years later he became financial editor of the Chicago Daily Journal. He served briefly as assistant manager of the statistical and analytical department of the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago. He joined the Chicago Journal of Commerce in 1920 and was manager of the New York office of that publication. In 1923 he returned to Chicago as financial editor.

In 1928 he formed the public relations firm of Beard & Ayers, Inc., later Ayers & Associates, in Chicago. Mr. Ayers rejoined the Chicago Journal of Commerce as managing editor in 1934 but resigned this position in 1944 and after a brief period in Mexico became vice president and editorial director of Davidson Publishing Co., publishers of trade papers.

During 1946 and part of 1947 he was managing editor of Finance magazine. During this period he formed the public relations firm of William L. Ayers & Associates, in Chicago, which is now known as the Newey-Ayers Organization.

Mr. Ayers is survived by his wife, Mrs. Helen R. Ayers, and by a daughter, Mrs. S. B. Quincy of Champaign, Ill., and a son, William Ayers, who is a student at Georgetown Preparatory School.

General Spots Himself in Famous Picture

The Washington Post

Jolson Left Over $4 Million, Much to Charity, Variety Says

NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (AP).—The weekly theatrical magazine Variety said today that jazz singer Al Jolson left more than four million dollars and that most of it will go to charity after "certain specific bequests are made."

The money will go to Jewish, Catholic and Protestant charities and to educational institutions, Variety said.

Variety said Jolson left generous trust funds for his fourth wife and widow, the former Erle Chennault Galbraith, and their two adopted children. Nothing was left to his previous wives but it was known they received generous terms upon divorce.

Funeral services will be held Thursday at Temple Israel. Rabbi Max Nussbaum, assisted by Cantor Saul Silverman, will officiate at the public services. Interment will be in Forest Lawn Memorial Park in nearby Glendale.

The active pallbearers will be Harry Brand and Harry Cohn, film executives; Louis Epstein, the singer's manager; Harry Akst and Martin Fried, Jolson's arranger and accompanist, respectively, who were with him when he died; Nathan Kramer, Al Goetz and John Sneckenberger, the last two of New York.

Other Jolson survivors include his stepmother, Mrs. Ida Yoelson of 1787 Lanier pl. nw., Washington; three stepbrothers, George Jolson, Meyer Jolson and Emil Yoelson, all of Washington, and a stepsister, Mrs. Gertrude Sollod of Baltimore. Jolson also leaves a brother, Harry, of Los Angeles.

Raskob Funds Bulk Goes to Catholic Work

CENTERVILLE, Md., Oct. 25 (U.P.).—John J. Raskob left the bulk of his $5,000,000 estate to the Rascob Foundation for Catholic Activities, his will filed for probate today revealed.

Personal effects and household furnishings of the 71-year-old former chairman of the Democratic National Committee were left to his 10 children and widow, for whom trust funds had been set up.

A daughter-in-law, Mrs. Minerva A. Raskob, San Francisco, was bequeathed $100,000. She is the wife of John J. Raskob, jr. Each of Raskob's 24 grandchildren received $50,000.

Bequests of unspecified amounts were made to Raskob's secretaries, Harold Seer and Frank L. Garey, executor of the estate, both of New York. Three years' salaries were left to two servants.

Col. Mark Devine Dies at 52; Hurt 5 Times in Bulge Battle

Col. Mark A. Devine, jr., 52, executive officer of the Army Intelligence Division, died of a heart attack yesterday morning at his home, 2015 Belmont rd .nw.

In World War II Colonel Devine commanded the Fourteenth Cavalry Group in the Battle of the Bulge in which he was wounded five times. The group withstood the attacks of several German divisions. He began his military career in World War I.

He served, after World War II, as military attache at American embassies in several Central American countries. In 1948 he returned to Washington.

Born in San Francisco, Colonel Devine attended St. Ignatius University, now the University of San Francisco.

Commissioned in 1917 at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., he served overseas with the Fifteenth Cavalry and later with the Army of Occupation in Germany. While there he became noted as an outstanding steeplechase rider and polo player.

Colonel Devine was stationed at Fort Myer, Va., from 1926 to 1930. He was one of the founders of the Army-Navy Country Club and was a member of the Army and Navy Club.

The French Legion of Honor, Croix de Guerre, and the Purple Heart with several Oak Leaf clusters were among his decorations.

Besides his wife, Mrs. Ianthe Devine, he leaves two daughters, Miss Helen Devine of the Belmont rd. address, and Mrs. Hayden M. Moberly of Alameda, Calif. Burial will be Friday in Arlington Cemetery.

Funeral arrangements have not yet been completed.

Louis Macina Dead; Former Restaurateur

Louis D. Macina, for many years a restaurateur in Washington and more recently connected with the Department of Justice, died late Tuesday night at Doctors Hospital after an illness of several weeks.

His restaurant, located on E st. nw., between 11th and 12th, was a rendezvous for the theatrical profession, among whose members he had a host of friends.

He is a native of Italy but came to this country as a child and had lived in Washington most of his life. He studied law and medicine while operating the restaurant and for a number of years had been employed at the Department of Justice.

Mr. Macina is survived by his parents, Raymond and Grace, and by a sister, Mary, all of 3638 Jenifer st. nw. Services will be at the S. H. Hines funeral home, 2901 14th st. nw.; at 9 a. m., Friday, and mass will be sung at 9:30 at the Shrine of the Most Blessed Sacrament.

At Bradley Party

Glitter of Brass Was Hard on the Eyes

By Marie McNair

A COUPLE OF DIVISIONS could have been raised with no trouble at all at the reception given by Gen. Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Mrs. Bradley yesterday afternoon.

Military chiefs, representatives to the North Atlantic Military Committee meeting in Washington this week, were guests of honor, and all of military Washington, or so it seemed, were there to greet them.

The British delegates—Fleet Admiral Lord Fraser of North Cape and Field Marshall Sir William Slim, both in dark blue uniforms strung with campaign ribbons, were ruddy cheeked with a determined dignity. Spectacled, khaki-clad Lieut. Gen. Efisio Marras, Army Chief of Staff of Italy, was gayer. But as the late afternoon wore on and nobody wanted to leave their pleasant surroundings, there wasn't a frown in the place.

THE BRADLEY'S SPACIOUS QUARTERS at Fort Myer look out over Washington's twinkling lights from the broad porches which surround the house.

Inside, one room opens easily into another, from the pale gold drawing room to the muralled dining room where yesterday a long buffet table held hams and turkeys, shrimps and hundreds of hors d'oeuvres, and sandwiches made right under your nose by the Bradley's white-capped chef.

Col. Anthony J. Drexel Biddle made the introductions and the General's aides and his executive officer, Col. Willis Matthews, were on hand to help keep things running smoothly. Mrs. Bradley's only concession to color for her soft black faille taffeta frock was a lei of tiny fresh orchids flown in from Hawaii.

All the working staff of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization had been invited to the fete, as well as the Ambassadors of the 12 Atlantic Pact Countries and top ranking Army, Navy, Marine and Air Force officers and their wives.

SUPREME COURT MEMBERS who had been asked were the Chief Justice and Mrs. Fred Vinson, Justice and Mrs. Tom Clark and Justice and Mrs. Harold Burton.

Four stars were almost as numerous as the stars in the firmanent at this party. Saw the Chief of Staff, Gen. Lawton Collins, and Mrs. Collins going down the line; and Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, with Mrs. Vandenberg wrapped in silver mink with a black toreador hat on her dark hair. Vice Chief of Staff Gen. Wade Haislip came with Mrs. Haislip from their quarters nearby, Mrs. Haislip in toast colored satin.

Averell Harriman, President Truman's new Special Assistant, was there with Mrs. Harriman in black taffeta and a peaked black velvet hat, making her debut again after an absence from Washington of a year or more. Air Marshal Lord Tedder, Chairman of the British Joint Services Mission, was accompanied by Lady Tedder and his Aide Wing Commander Wiles; the Belgian Ambassador, Baron Robert Silvercruys slipped quietly through the throng.

THE NORWEGIAN AMBASSADOR and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne were there and the British Ambassador and Lady Franks, and the Luxembourg Minister and Mme. LeGallais, the Italian Ambassador and Signora Tarchiani, the Portuguese Ambassador and Mme. de Esteves Fernandes.

The glamor of uniforms and ribbons paled in the light of the Dior gown worn by Mme. Bonnet, wife of the French Ambassador. Of finely pleated satin, the ankle-length skirt was built over hoops at the hips, and a demure turned-down collar finished the shirtwaist top.

More? Well—the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. John Snyder, Mrs. Conger Pratt and Mrs. Lesley J. McNair, widow of the general, who came together from the Kennedy-Warren where they both live; former Marine Commandant, Gen. Alexander Vandegrift, and Mrs. Vandegrift, up from Lynchburg, Va., where they are now making their home; Gen. and Mrs. Gordon Young, Capt. and Mrs. William Murphy, Gen. and Mrs. Lauris Norstad, the latter in fireman red with a wee black hat; Gen. and Mrs. A. C. McAuliffe, and Gen. and Mrs. W. D. Connor.

From among the General and Mrs. Bradley's civilian friends were Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Borden Harriman, Mr. and Mrs. James K. Vardaman, Miss Rose Saul in emerald green satin, going on to the symphony; Miss Carolyn Nash and Mr. and Mrs. James Souby.

Ambassador to Panama Honored

MONNETT DAVIS, United States Ambassador to Panama, and Mrs. Davis, home on vacation, were feted yesterday at a reception at the Panamanian Embassy. The host and hostess, Ambassador Rodolfo Herbruger and Senora de Herbruger, received with their honor guests from 6 to 8 p. m. in the drawing room.

During the early half of the receiving hours doors were opened wide onto a flagstone terrace rimmed with fall flowers. In the house yellow and white chrysanthemums added a bright note. A buffet of hors d'oeuvres in the dining room offered all the specialties for which Panamanian parties are noted. There were diminutive "sighs," which disappeared at sight, grapefruits spiked with tiny sausage, and empanadas, highly spiced.

A number of old friends turned out to greet the Davises, who have been at their post in Panama for about two and one half years. Tomorrow, the Ambassador and his wife are leaving for a visit in New York, but they plan to be in the States until the latter part of December.

Change Your Hair to Suit Your Mood

By Evelyn Hayes

THE VERY very short short haircut is dead! The word "shingle" has reverted to a term in the building industry. In its place there is a basic haircut—the short cut which can be changed to suit the occasion.

At the far right is a short cut that may be worn several ways—even as a basic dress. Here it's worn with a center part and shaped cap crown—very good for daytime and sportswear and with the new small crown-hugging hats.

At the right is the basic short cut "accessorized" with a chignon for evening or formal wear. The chignon, a false piece of—or matching—your own hair, is the latest news in hair styles. New York's famed models are wearing chignons in various ways to give variety and a new look to their short cuts.

These two styles have been designed here by Mr. Leonard, representing the Washington Unit of the National Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Association, in celebration of National Beauty Salon Week.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Wife, 42, Is Shocked to Discover That Husband's Will Provides Inadequately for Her, Although He Has a Substantial Estate; How Correct Injustice?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband and I have been married for 20 years, and recently he made his will, the terms of which are quite a shock to me. I should estimate that he (I can hardly say "we") is worth about eighty thousand dollars. This includes real estate, business property and cash, and "our" home.

Ed's will leaves me twenty-five thousand dollars in trust, to be paid at two hundred dollars per month for 10 years, or until it runs out. I am to have the use of the home for the duration of my life, after which it goes into the trust estate, to be apportioned out to surviving members of his immediate family. The balance of his estate will go to cousins, nieces, brothers, et al, who are not in want by any standards. In fact his nieces are well-to-do in their own right.

I am just 43 now—Ed is 10 years older.—and really I don't know what to say or do, to persuade him that he is doing a terrible thing. By that: I mean putting a time-limit on the "support" I shall get after he is gone. I am not counting on his dying, and would sincerely grieve to lose him; but I just cannot understand his doing a thing like this.

In the event he did die in the next few years, say when I am 55, I'd have two hundred dollars a month for 10 years, then at the age of 60-odd I'd have to scratch for a living. Unless I care to pay a lump sum to an old people's home and reside there.

I am not against Ed's leaving all his money in trust for the balance of my life, then to be paid to his family; but why cut me off this way? Please, can you help me in any way to persuade him that he's not being exactly fair? Or is he? G. C.

DEAR G. C.: Since drafting wills is foreign to my routine, I've turned to a firm of good lawyers for an opinion on Ed's will, as to whether it is a decent or an unfair document, compared to the general practice. I am told that its terms are "quite exceptional" for an estate this size.

"Eighty thousand dollars isn't a large estate from the legal viewpoint; but neither is it small," my consultants say. "Normally a man leaves the whole estate this size to his widow, either in trust for her lifetime, after which it may revert to his kin—as your correspondent suggests. Or he leaves it to her with no strings attached. If she is reckless with money or inexperienced in business, a provident husband usually establishes a trust estate, and names a trusted lawyer or bank officer to invest her funds productively."

By this definition of customary consideration for a widow in your circumstances it appears that Ed has plotted short treatment for you; and ordinarily a lot of bad feeling is packaged in that kind of deal.

Thus I can't think of a way to change his mind and win him to more humane concessions, without first getting to the core of what's irritating him about you, and helping him drop the griped attitude. Maybe he thinks you've never sufficiently appreciated him, or that you've always been too free with his hard-earned dough; ergo, he meanly intends to "teach you a lesson" after he's gone.

HOWEVER, though the terms of his will are grudging, at least the inheritance laws in your jurisdiction are more generous with the widow. According to laws in force and effect there, you may "renounce under the will," as the legal phrase goes—i. e., waive its provisions for yourself—and claim your "inherent dower right and distributive share." The dower right gives you one-third share for life in all real estate; and the distributive share includes one half share in all personal properties, such as bank deposits, stocks, furnishings, etc. My consultants say this should add up to a bigger slice than Ed's will decrees at the present writing.

Having furnished this information gratis, my legal advisers further say that "as an investment in peace of mind, you ought to discuss your anxieties with a good lawyer in your community." From such a man you may get precise details on your dower rights and how to invoke them; and possibly also he could give you wise guidance in ironing out misunderstandings with your husband, so that a better will may be drawn before too late. M. H.

Dreams Come True to Form At Woodie's

Yesterday afternoon in their seventh floor tea-room Woodward & Lothrop's brought several dreams to life. These are the dreams you have been seeing in an advertising campaign built around such fantasies as "I Dreamed I Went Shopping—in My Maidenform Bra."

The fashion show features five dream sequences—with one bra shown on a live model in each. The second sequence was: "I Dreamed I Went to the Redskins' Game in My Maidenform Bra." Featured here was a bra to be worn with sweaters, wool jerseys and such suits as one might wear for a football game. To open, one model stepped out completely dressed for a football game with grey flannel skirt, muffler, even a chrysanthemum — except that she was wearing only the bra on top.

The shock value was considerable—but so was the fashion effect of the rest of the sequence in which four other models appeared completely dressed (really complete!) in tweeds, sports suits, warm colored wools. A highlight here was a fascinating stadium coat that seemed to do everything but cheer. Made of bright red corduroy with huge revers and collar of mouton.

They're giving a repeat performance this afternoon at 4:30 in the seventh-floor tea room. Rush down if you want to see the news in figures and the newest in fashions—and a dramatic fashion show designed to prove that the figure makes the fashion in 1950!—E. H.

Sparkling Eyes Should Be Beautifully Framed

By Ann Lawrence

JOAN'S EYES ARE A SPARKLING, dark brown, set at an intriguing angle.

As an individual feature, they are beautiful and distinctive. But eyes do not stand alone in the face. They are framed, or are meant to be framed, by well-shaped, well cared-for eyebrows.

And those, Joan did not have. Joan's eyebrows were plucked and neglected until they had become two hard lines.

WHEN AN EYEBROW DOES not follow through, to the outer tip of the eye socket bone, it is one of the surest known ways to decrease the apparent size of the eye. The eye is stopped short, just where the eyebrow stops. A gently curved line, following the eye socket, blended off to a natural-looking tip, seemingly increased the size.

Because Joan's brows were so unkempt and ragged, the first prescription was for an a. m. and p. m. combing. She learned to take a fine-toothed comb (break the end of an old one if you don't have anything else handy), and start at the inner corner, combing up and through the little hairs, even the scraggly ones left at the end of the straight line.

Then, so that they would be easier to train into a sleek, soft arch, she rubbed a bit of vaseline into them and repeated the combing process. This whole business takes only about 15 seconds.

HOWEVER, SINCE JOAN COULD not make the rounds of photographers, seeking a job, with her brows thus shaped, she learned to make them up, subtly and naturally, until the hairs grew back. In the picture at right above, you see both eyes made up, with black mascara, brushed from root to tip of the upper lashes only; with a tiny black line drawn in at the corner and ending with an upward slant to accentuate the natural tilt of her eyes. Hazel eyes shadow has been added, a nice complimentary tone for brown eyes.

The brows themselves have been pencilled in with an ordinary soft lead pencil. This gives a more natural effect than an eyebrow pencil, and it seemed easier for Joan to paint fine little hairlines with it. Brows have been arched, combed, again using vaseline, and the tips extend far beyond the line Joan used to have.

FOR ACTUAL modeling or TV appearances, Joan will use a regular theatrical eye make-up, of course. But this is the way her eyes will look when she's hunting that job.

Folks Got Up Early When Grandma Made Buckwheat Pancakes—and Still Do

WHEN I WAS A CHILD, my grandmother wrapped a bowl of buckwheat batter in flannel every winter Saturday night and set it on the hearth to rise. Her Sunday morning buckwheat cakes were the best I ever ate, I'm sure, but, of course, one's taste buds are sharper in one's pigtail days . . .

However, something that doesn't seem to have declined in sharpness through the years is a general appreciation of good, old-fashioned buckwheat. A number of letters about them have come in lately. For instance:

DEAR ANNE:

Although I have numerous cook books, I am unable to find a recipe for buckwheat pancakes using yeast as the leavening agent. If either you or a reader can supply one it will be much appreciated. Mrs. G. D., Arlington, Va.

This one's from the "United States Regional Cookbook," by Ruth Berolzheimer (Halcyon House.)

BUCKWHEAT CAKES

2 cups boiling water
1 yeast cake
4 cups buckwheat flour
½ teaspoon baking soda, dissolved in 1 cup hot water
1 tablespoon molasses
1 teaspoon salt

Scald the milk and add the boiling water. Cool to lukewarm temperature and dissolve yeast cake in mixture. Sift in enough flour (using more than 4 cups, if necessary) to make a batter thin enough to pour.

Let rise overnight in earthen crock or bowl. In the morning, add the dissolved soda, molasses, and salt. Fry on a greased griddle. Makes 3½ dozen cakes.

You can keep ½ cup of this batter in a cool place to use in place of yeast for next day's pancakes and proceed as above.

A couple of readers have sent additional news about where to buy buckwheat flour. For the benefit of Virginia readers, Dorothy Ann Seal of Arlington, suggests a meat market in East Falls Church. W. L. Pearson of Keysville, Va., writes in that he's just eaten some delicious buckwheats made with flour ordered from Box 457, Louisa, Va.

Doris Seidenberg to Become Bride

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Seidenberg announce the engagement of their daughter, Doris Louise, to Isaac Pazornick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Pazornick of Baltimore. The wedding will take place during the early part of next year.

Miss Seidenberg was graduated from Roosevelt High School and is now a student at George Washington University. During the war she was active in USO and JWB hospital division. She is a member of the National Council of Jewish Women, Junior Division.

During World War II Mr. Pazornick was in the service of the United States Naval Air Force for four years as an aviation machinist mate first class, and saw overseas action. He is now in business in Baltimore.

Junior League Reviews 36 Years of Good Works

THIRTY-SIX YEARS of Junior League good works were outlined at the league's annual fall luncheon held yesterday at the Shoreham. A dozen past presidents sat at the speakers table with this year's president, Mrs. Millard West, and the current officers of the organization. Speeches were brief, with an overtone of humor.

The small tables in the terrace room were gay with fall flowers and Halloween arrangements which were judged later for prizes. The Junior League's Outgrown Shop competed with the Thrift Shop in a fashion show of snappy frocks which go for a song to benefit the league's several philanthropic projects.

Before the group got down to the serious business of the day—a talk by Mrs. William Anderson on housing and Mrs. Alexander Guyol's report on the league's television show "Playtime"—Mrs. Smith Hempstone, 1914-15 president, told members how the league got started. She was followed by Mrs. A. Chambers Oliphant, president from 1915 to 1917, with facts and figures on the league's accomplishments for her two-year term. Other past presidents were Miss Virginia Hunt, Mrs. Sidney Thomas, Mrs. G. Howland Chase 3d, Miss Anne Carter Greene, Mrs. William W. Mackall, jr., Mrs. William North Sturtevant, Miss Cecil Lester Jones, Mrs. Robert W. Wilson, Mrs. Charles Runyon and Mrs. Herbert Fales.

FIRST PRIZE for fall decoration went to Mrs. Richard Stiefel, who had arranged a tempting display of vegetables on a bamboo tray. The Halloween theme prize was won by Mrs. Grant Boss who had produced a miniature pumpkin and sprays of Japanese lantern flowers. Second prize winner for a floral centerpiece was the exotic bird-of-paradise flower in a shallow bowl by Mrs. George McGhee and Mrs. Hamilton Robinson 2d.

A ghost and a twisted piece of driftwood which Agnes Birney brought back from Mrs. Dabney Jarman's Nova Scotia farm was the inspiration for the Halloween decoration for which she and Betsy Wyche won second prize.

Charles Del Vecchio—The Washington Post

GET TOGETHER—Three former presidents of the Junior League meet held yesterday at the Shoreham. Mrs. Smith Hempstone, who was Miss Elizabeth Noyes when she was president in 1914, is at left. In the center is the present president, Mrs. Millard F. West, jr., and at right is a former president, Mrs. G. Howland Chase.

Prizes were given also for the first Junior Leaguer to name correctly from which shop—Outgrown or Thrift—had come any one of the modeled frocks. Flavia Lee won that one—a pink hat wound with matching tulle.

Mrs. Robert Menzell was a Thrift Shop model; so was Mrs. Thomas Shepard, wearing an orange and blue plaid wool dress. Other Thrift Shop models were Mrs. Sidney Buford in a wine red taffeta jacket frock; Mrs. William Snow, Mrs. Henry Gardner, Mrs. Prentiss Wilson, jr., Mrs. Edward Ferriday, Mrs. Alan Ferguson, Mrs. Josiah Spaulding and Mrs. Gilbert Brown.

Cornelia Hoeffel in a young girl's pink tulle dancing gown was the hit from the Outgrown Shop. Showing other "Outgrowns" were Mrs. Emmet Echols and daughter, Drew; Mrs. Arthur Barry, Mrs. Hal Clagett, jr., Mrs. John Red, Miss Betty Easton, and Mrs. John Stanley

Officers at the head table were Mrs. Howard Heun, first vice president; Mrs. Travis Brown; Mrs. William Anderson, Mrs. James Lynn, Mrs. Thomas Shepard, second vice president; Mrs. Henry Allen, Mrs. Robert Reeside, Mrs. David Varner, Mrs. Hugo Huettig, Mrs. Walter Boyd and Miss Elizabeth Houghton. Mrs. Minnegerode Allen, luncheon chairman, had hand-painted personal placecards for the guests at the head table.

Embassy Row

THE NORWEGIAN AMBASSADOR, Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne, gave a stag dinner at the embassy last evening honoring the Norwegian Minister of Defense, Jens Hauge, who is here attending meetings of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

In addition to the Defense Minister, guests were the Danish Minister of Defense, Rasmus Hansen; the Ambassador of Denmark, Henrik de Kauffmann; Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, jr.; Gen. Wade Hampton Haislip, Gen. Nathan Twining, Assistant Secretary of the Air Force Harold C. Stuart, and Lieut. Gen. Willis D. Crittenberger.

THE AMBASSADOR OF TURKEY, Feridun C. Erkin, gave a luncheon yesterday for the Palestine Conciliation Commission. Among the guests were the French Ambassador, Henri Bonnet; Assistant Secretary of State George C. McGhee, First Secretary of the French Embassy Jean-Pierre Benard, Arthur A. Gardner and Edmond G. Dorsz.

Also, Stuart W. Rockwell, John D. Equitable Life Of D. C. to Vote Hike in Capital

By S. Oliver Goodman

Stockholders of Equitable Life Insurance Co. will vote at a special meeting November 21 on a proposal to increase authorized capital stock.

Phillips

Charles E. Phillips, president of the firm whose home offices are at 816 14th st. nw., said yesterday that present authorized capital stock is $600,000, all of which is outstanding. Stockholders' approval of an amendment to the charter is sought by the board of trustees in order to bring capitalization more in line with the present size of the company.

Equitable Life's assets have more than tripled in the past decade and insurance in force has more than doubled Phillips pointed out. The firm, which has 33 branch offices in six States and the District of Columbia, expects to attain the 300-million-dollar insurance in force level by the end of this year. Just 10 years ago, insurance in force approximated 124 million dollars.

Assets on September 30 reached a new all-time high in excess of 50 million dollars, as compared with 16 million at the end of 1940.

Mortgage loans currently exceed 26 million dollars, and more than 90 percent of these are in the Washington area, Phillips emphasized.

JOINS SCHENLEY: Brig. Gen. E. F. Jeffe (ret.), will retire as vice president of Consolidated Edison Co., Inc., to become a vice president and director of Schenley Industries, Inc., effective November 1. Jeffe will be in charge of Schenley's Washington program, coordinating the company's facilities with civilian and military requirements. His offices will be in Washington and New York.

NEW PRESIDENT: Joseph A. Hamilton of Northwest Airlines was elected president of the Air Line Traffic Association of Washington. Other officers of the association, formed five years ago by sales representatives of the airlines serving this city, are: Charles Hagedorn, vice president; Bob Rickey, secretary, and Bob Carlin, treasurer. The group seeks to promote better interline relations.

Hamilton

AAA ELECTIONS: James F. Willett yesterday was elected assistant treasurer of the American Automobile Association. Willett is an assistant vice president of American Security & Trust Co. Reelected treasurer of the AAA was Daniel W. Bell, president of A. S. & T. Also reelected at the annual convention in New York City was L. E. Holland as president of the national motoring body.

ODD LOTS: Tantalizing publicity about the mysterious Countess Maria Pulaski, "internationally famous British espionage agent . . . who will unveil all" is expected to boost attendance at annual dinner meeting November 15 of the D. C. Association of Insurance Agents in the Mayflower . . . Federal Court yesterday approved sale at auction of Tucker Corp. assets for $464,135 . . . Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food index this week turned upward for first time in six weeks, rising to $6.50 from $6.48 a week ago . . . Kaiser-Frazer stockholders have approved amending company's charter to allow the auto firm to enter the shipbuilding business.

LEAGUE TO MEET: Dr. Murray Banks, lecturer and psychologist, will be guest speaker at the annual election meeting of the D. C. Building and Loan League on Tuesday in the Shoreham Hotel. Re-election of Fred A. Smith as league president is anticipated.

EARNINGS: Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. reported net income of $99,410,080 or $3.45 a share for the first nine months, compared with $66,429,392 or $2.30 a share in same 1949 period. Other earnings statements on a per-share basis:

Carr Assails Sasscer In Tour of County

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Thomas S. Carr, Republican candidate for Congress from the Fifth Maryland District, yesterday toured Prince Georges County and told a night rally "I haven't seen a bogey man yet."

Carr said his campaign opponent, Representative Lansdale G. Sasscer (D., Md.), was talking "baloney" when Sasscer accused Carr of talking "hokum."

The "baloney" and "hokum" charges sprang from Carr's statement that he received three anonymous calls over the weekend warning him to stay out of Prince Georges County.

Carr, an Annapolis radio station executive, spent the day meeting voters in a door-to-door tour of Capitol Heights, District Heights, Colmar Manor and Cottage City.

Carr was accompanied through Colmar Manor by Mayor John N. Torvestad. The latter ran in 1940 and 1942 against Representative Sasscer.

After accompanying Carr in the afternoon "Main st. tour," he said that the reaction to Candidate Carr was "better than when I campaigned."

Also with Carr was his campaign manager, J. Lawrence Greene, jr., Baltimore attorney and former delegate to the Republican National Convention.

Greene estimated that in Carr's campaign the candidate has talked personally to 25,000 persons.

Carr, who is six feet, two inches tall and a former football center in school days, said he has lost 33 pounds during his campaign. He now weighs 220.

"I know I have a tough fight," Carr said, "but if anybody is going to lick Representative Sasscer I'm going to do it."

About 100 persons turned out for the evening rally, in the Municipal Building in the Negro community of Fairmont Heights, Prince Georges.

Carr told the rally the reason he had become the target of the anonymous telephone calls was that he had said that "gambling, vice and crime has been allowed to run rampant here in Prince Georges County."

He added that Representative Sasscer had failed to deny that bookmakers and crap games and "other trash" had floated over the District line into the county.

Sasscer had told reporters that he did not know of any rampant crime, but was not a law-enforcement officer.

Carr said that if Sasscer "continues to close his eyes to the facts, he is unfit to be in office."

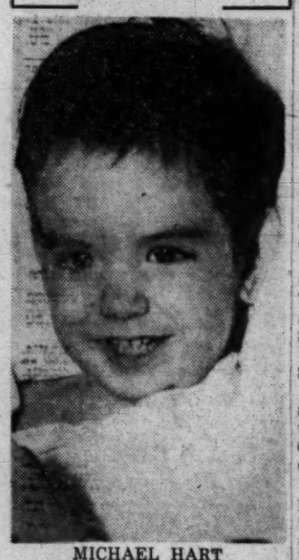
'Mikey' Hart

20-Month-Old Boy Recovers From Burns



MICHAEL HART

"Mikey" Hart, 20-month-old toddler and explorer, can grin and bear his burn pains now, but for 22 days it was all bearing.

"Mikey," son of a George Washington Hospital nurse, climbed out of his crib on September 14, climbed into a wash basin, and turned on the tap—of scalding water.

Four days later, his body raging with burn poisoning, he went into a coma, a twilight period of unconsciousness which ended, dramatically, on October 10. That day, he "saw" his mother, smiled as if nothing had happened, and took the ice-cream cone she held out to him.

Now, his doctors said last night, "Mikey" is fit enough to start getting skin-grafts for his burned feet and legs. The donors are two of the many nurses who cared for him during his seemingly-endless crisis.

George J. Hart, Washington free-lance medical and science writer, said he heard his son cry out in pain, and pulled him from the basin of steaming water.

Living at 2223 H st. nw., in one of the hospital apartments, it took no time at all to get the boy to the emergency room of the hospital, just around the corner.

Yesterday, the boy's mother, Eileen was making the thank-you rounds that took in the whole hospital staff, and the District Red Cross Blood Bank. She thanked the internes, the nurses and the doctors. She thanked Nurse Carol Allen, who for three days in a row, gave some of her blood for transfusion into the boy's bloodstream.

And she thanked Nurses Mary McColm and Virginia Greaves, who today will donate some of their to help "Mikey" on his road to recovery, and the others who have promised more if its needed.

Dr. Dawson to Talk On 'Religious Freedom'

Dr. Joseph M. Dawson, executive director of the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs, will talk on, "New Challenges to Religious Freedom," tonight at 8:30 at Grace Lutheran Church, 16th and Varnum sts. nw. The meeting is sponsored by the church's brotherhood and is open to the public.

McKeldin Attacks Road-Building Program

HAGERSTOWN, Md., Oct. 25 (AP).—Theodore R. McKeldin described Governor Lane's road-building program tonight as a "political crazy quilt"—a new road here and a new bridge there.

He said at a Washington County rally the roads program is designed "to make a local showing" for Lane, who is seeking a second term.

McKeldin told of the money it costs to move heavy construction equipment long distances to begin new jobs.

"Everything knows it is more expensive to build roads in the Lane hop-skip-and-jump plan than to complete them in one operation," he said.

Pre-Halloween Carnival

The Junior Police and Citizens Corps will sponsor a pre-Halloween carnival Friday at St. Georges Episcopal Church at 160 U st. nw. from 6 to 10 p. m.

Md. Sales Tax Receipts Rise 21% in Year

BALTIMORE, Oct. 25 (AP).—Maryland's sales tax brought in almost eight million dollars in the first quarter of the current fiscal year, 21.14 percent more than receipts from the levy in the same period of 1949.

A report from Comptroller J. Millard Tawes today showed sales tax collections from June 30 to September 30, 1950, of $7,973,548.34. During the first three months of the last fiscal year, $6,582,283.78 was collected.

The gasoline tax was the State's second-best source of revenue, bringing in $7,379,393.15, an increase of 24.63 percent over the first three months of the 1949 fiscal year.

Total receipts from the sales and gasoline taxes and the 11 other major revenue sources were $32,846,000. That is 11.79 percent more than total collections for the comparable 1949 period.

Showing declines were the income tax, 17.98 percent; horse racing tax, 13.02 percent and receipts from State hospitals and training schools, .81 percent.

Fairfax School Conditions Defended at Suit Hearing

Fairfax County school conditions were defended yesterday by School Superintendent W. T. Woodson as the county began its courtroom reply to an annexation suit by the city of Alexandria.

In a rebuttal of testimony offered by Alexandria School Superintendent T. C. Williams last Friday, Woodson admitted "some shortcomings" in the county school system, but contended most of them would be eliminated through a $10,500,000 school bond issue approved by county voters last May.

Woodson told a special 3-judge tribunal in Fairfax Williams was "incorrect" in his testimony about the pupil-teacher ratio in some of the schools in the 7½-square-mile "annexation zone." He cited current records purporting to show a lighter teacher-load in county schools than had been cited by the Alexandria superintendent.

Woodson also challenged Williams's statements concerning conditions in some of the schools used by Fairfax students. He said the Manassas Regional High School for Negroes, termed "obsolete" by the Alexandria superintendent, has a vocational shop which "probably is among the best of its kind in the State."

Cites Teacher Salaries

He also pointed out that home economics classes in all four of the high schools attended by pupils living in the annexable zone are recognized by the State as "vocational" classes and thus are qualified to receive State financial aid. The same courses in Alexandria's George Washington High School are not recognized by the State, Woodson declared, and therefore the city does not receive any State grants.

Woodson said the county's annual per capita expenditure of $154.55 for each child educated in its school system is exceeded by only two counties and five cities in the State. He said only one Virginia county has a higher salary range for teachers than Fairfax.

Woodson was one of four county witnesses to testify after Alexandria rested its case. The last witness for the city was Paul Stone, a builder and developer who owns more than 80 acres of land in the disputed territory.

Dismissal Motion Killed

Stone said he wanted his land annexed by Alexandria because he believed he would receive better police and fire protection and other government services than the county now affords.

After Stone's testimony, the court rejected a motion by Robert J. McCandlish, jr., attorney for the county, for dismissal of the case. McCandlish contended that the "burden of proof rests with the plaintiff" and that Alexandria had not established the need for added territory.

Witnesses for the county, besides Woodson, were Maj. Carl McIntosh, chief of police; Miss Ruth Ashburn, county librarian; Thomas E. McDonough, electrical inspector, and Fire Warden Marcel Pfalzgraf. They described the functions of their respective departments in an effort to convince the court that the county provides adequate facilities to the disputed area.

The suit will be resumed at 10 a. m. today.

Walter Winchell . . . In New York

Broadway Heartbeat

Silhouettes About Town: Olsen & Johnson, whose "Pardon Our French" was spanked by the critics, enjoying private guffaws. The show grossed $40,000 in its second week, anyhow . . . Judge Ferdinand Pecora, 2 to 1 over the field in the race for Mayor, arguing politics with the 43d and Main Stem bootblack . . . Irving Berlin, the millionaire (and No. 1 money man among songwriters), getting his quarterly check for $13,000 under the new ASCAP arrangement. It was never over 4Gs . . . Ginger Rogers "gilding the lily" at Richard Hudnut's 5th Ave. beauty salon just before catching the Twentieth Century back to Glamourtown . . . Judy Garland and her new doll, which recites the Lord's Prayer. Judy just turned down $20,000 for one teevy shot . . . Fulton Oursler, whose book, "The Greatest Story Ever Told," has hit the 600,000 copy mark . . . Comic Danny Thomas, whose pals call him The Reverend because he's always preaching.

Sallies in Our Alley: Donald Richards, the former GI turned songstar, was visiting an actor pal (just back from the Korean front) in the hospital . . . A fan mag gal came to interview the wounded man . . . "Just what," she queried, "did you miss most out there?" . . . "Fresh cut flowers on the table every morning!" was the Squelch Proper . . . Arthur Godfrey was up all night stifling the annual rumor that he died . . . "It always happens," he said, "every time I take a nap with my tuxedo on!"

Midtown Vignette: George Burns (& Allen) was ankling along West 57th Street . . . A fellow who went to school with George and who hadn't been in touch with him for over 20 years, recognized him but kept going . . . He felt that Burns, now a big celebrity, wouldn't remember an old school chum . . . George put out a hand and greeted: "Hey, Bob! Who's got the swelled head—you or I?"

Memos of a Midnighter: Intimates insist the Milton Berles will probably wed for the third time. The Pagliacci calls her daily . . . Dolores Costello (former silent screen pet) is not too merry about her son (J. Barrymore, jr.) talking merger with Betty Drown, a divorcee. "He's such a chi-yuld!" . . . Henry Morgan is uh-huh about actress Nina Doll, recently freed by the divorce courts . . . Carol Lynn Gilmer, whose late husband Tom Heggen co-auth'd "Mr. Roberts," married WJZ producer D. Yellen . . . The Edgar Tracey's (he's the copper mint) have parted. She will file in Florida's Duval County . . . Claude Dauphin, the French star, is being unmarried in Paris. He will wed Anne Vernon . . . The Literati will be pained to learn that Miss Bush, the phone op at The Algonquin for 37 years, is ill

Broadway Side-Show: One of the drama critics encountered a new problem . . . His managing editor recently joined the first-nighters and has his own opinions on what the public should see . . . The boss has deleted or inserted some of his own comments in a few recent notices, which the critic didn't know about until he read the reviews . . . The off-stage drama of all this is that the critic (a kin of the founders) will one day inherit the newspaper . . . It is not unlikely that when that day arrives he will even matters by demoting the m. e. to d. e.

Times Square Tabletalk: The American Legion will target two of Dashiell Hammett's radio programs . . . J. Gunther, now finishing his book on MacArthur, will next dissect Peron . . . TV's next headache is expected about Yuletide when the Musicians' Union declares war . . . Songbird Terry Swope, former Benny Goodman vocallure, is now Mrs. F. Navarre. He's the hardware moneybags . . . Cole Porter's asking fee for his "Out of This World" score is said to be $75,000. A fantastic figger according to Tune-Pan Alleyites. The usual advance is 10 Gs, never higher than 25 .

The Orchid Garden: Hollywood Star Playhouse (CBS) Mondayeves . . . "Red Masquerade" (Lippincott) by Angela Calomiris. She was an FBI undercover-agent within the Communist Party for seven years and helped convict the leaders . . . Avery Giles' book of light verse, "And They Hang Pictures!" . . . Ethel Waters' platter of "Am I Blue?" . . . Jean Bishop's song styles at Bill Bertolotti's . . . Russell Nype, who received sugary notices in "Call Me Madam." When it was trying out in New Haven he was almost fired!

Manhattan Murals: The biggest beer bottle in the world on the lager sign at 43d and The Big Apple. Three stories wide, 10 high . . . The quaint store at 132 E. 55th, which features only miniature furniture. Some of it sells at $1000 . . . The gem shop at 57th near 6th, which showcases a solid gold fish—hook at only $55 . . .

There's No Business Like It: We recorded on Monday that Billy Eckstine was signed by MGM records to a million dollar 10-year contract . . . L. B. Mayer, bossman of Metro, then signed Eckstine to his first movie contract—he will confront the cameras in July . . . The big deals were signatured in Loew's State Bldg. on B'way—where 5 years ago Eckstine was cancelled after his first matinee.

The Late Watch: Midtowners are breathless over an atomic situation involving a Broadway doctor and a prominent married belle. Her husband has a sledge-hammer wallop . . . Insurance tycoon Stewart Hopp's son Robert and Beverly Hanson, Cleveland society girl, will blend at St. Patrick's Cathedral Nov. 8th. The romance blossomed at Rollins College, Florida, six months ago . . . Pageant associate editor Jane Benford and D. Wynn, fashion photographer, will announce their betrothal soon . . . ANTA'S first play series, "The Tower Beyond Tragedy," is by Robinson Jeffers, not GBS . . . The Mustache works on police reports until three ayem, another reason for new Police Comm. Murphy's great popularity . . . The big reason for the Waldorf's earnings taking a sharp rise: It reduced its staff by over 400 and two months ago tilted rates from $1 to $5 per room . . . "You and Your Big Ears" (by Chas. Henderson and Jack Brooks) is en route to The Hit Parade . . . From a N. Y. Times music review: "The surfaces of the harmony, as one might say, seem hard, almost lapidary." Or, as we common folks might say, stone-like.

Woman Bids In Postal Sale Ring for $585

The fierce and nervous bidding for "Lot 194"—the ring, fit for a "Diamond Jim"—was the dramatic moment in the auctioning off of 470 "lots" for thousands of dollars.

It was standing-room-only in Room 3083 Main Postoffice Building with 400 citizens attending. An Eversharp pen went for $2, a 36-piece sterling silver set for $100, a 17-jewel Bulova watch for $15, a 21-jewel Elgin for $18, three pairs of binoculars for $22, a Swiss "Montes Doxa" chronometer for $44.

After being held for a year, the hoard was offered to the highest bidders because the original owners had failed to wrap or address their packages carefully enough before depositing them in Uncle Sam's mails.

But most intriguing of all was: "one man's diamond ring. Approximately 2½ karat, 14 karat gold mounting."

Tension Mounts

Tension mounted as the moment came for William Lynch, a Postoffice employe, acting like a professional auctioneer, to put the great ring on the block. It went up with an asking price of $300.

Three or four voices jumped into the bidding—including a dealer, reportedly. The bids fled upward . . . $350 . . . $375 . . . $395. Then a quiet, well-dressed woman in furs in the front row whom no one had noticed spoke almost-inaudibly:

"$400."

The woman in furs matched bid for bid until someone bid $580. The bidding paused.

Bids $5 More

"The lady in the front row bids $585!" Lynch exclaimed.

Afterward she told a reporter why she wanted the ring.

"I have a friend in Georgia, a farmer, a big farmer, with a thousand acres . . . but he wears old clothes and looks adways like he needs a handout. He's always wanted one thing: A diamond ring. And he's been nice to me: So I bought it.

"Please don't use my name, please. I want to surprise him. I'm taking it to him next week." She fingered the ring and a soft smile traced her lips. "I can see him looking at the ring on the hand guiding a tractor."

LOW COST POST AD SELLS BICYCLE

Last week a lady in Silver Spring sold a used bicycle for $15.00 by inserting a two line want ad in The Washington Post at a cost of 66c.

Other items offered in last week's want ad section were books, building materials, baby carriages, beds, a Bendix, bricks, Buicks (new and used), a bus, a lot of bedroom furniture, bassinettes and bathinettes, a barber shop, beagles, and bathroom fixtures.

A brief case and a boxer were reported lost, and job openings for butchers, bookkeepers, boys, billing clerks, bootblacks, barbers, and bricklayers were listed.

If you have anything to sell, or a job to fill, place a classified ad in The Washington Post. You can do it by calling NAtional 4200.

Liquor Price Fix Feared Here

Failure to act against a local liquor distributor would have the effect of giving the District a liquor "fair trade" law, a Government attorney warned the Federal Trade Commission yesterday.

The FTC, in a complaint brought nearly two years ago against the Middle Atlantic Distributors, Inc., has charged the firm with suppressing competition among retail dealers by attempts to set minimum resale prices.

Waving a trade paper headlined, "FTC May Give District a Fair Trade Act," Prosecuting Attorney Paul R. Dixon told the FTC Commissioners:

Dixon had reference to the so-called "fair trade" bill, commonly regarded as a voluntary price-fixing measure, which is considered each year in Congress. The proposed legislation would permit contracts under which retailers would agree to sell at prices set by wholesaler supply houses. Large segments of the liquor industry favor the legislation. The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board opposes it.

The tiff came as the FTC heard final oral arguments and then took the case under advisement. The commission may either dismiss the allegations of price-fixing or issue a cease-and-desist order against the firm.

Fast on Her Feet

She Makes Radio Business Boom

—By Cynthia Lowry—

NEW YORK (AP).—Not many radio stations have a distinct personality. New York's WNEW does, however, and the personality belongs to fast-talking, fast-thinking Bernice Judis.

A David among Goliaths, WNEW is a 10,000 watt independent station settled in small, plush gaudy offices a stone's throw from the impressive headquarters of the four big networks. This is really a handy location, because it lets Miss Judis keep an eye on what the big wheels are up to—and the giants keep Miss Judis under close scrutiny too.

Officially, brunette Miss Judis is the manager and—now—part owner of WNEW. Actually, it's her baby, nursed sagely to its present eminence by her own hand, head and instincts. From a forlorn orphan 16 years ago living on leavings, Miss Judis has needled WNEW to the spot of being the Nation's biggest independent station. She has done it by her own convictions, drive and great sagacity in picking good people to do jobs her way. Last year the station grossed three million dollars.

HER STATION follows a formula of administering massive doses of popular music, broken by frequent news broadcasts and terse commercials by soft-voiced announcers. At least, that's what she says.

"It's set up so you can tune in the station in the morning and keep it on all day," she proclaims. "If you leave the room or the house, you don't worry because you know that you won't miss anything."

Miss Judis hates soap opera and what she calls "recipe-givers." She'll have none of either. But she watches what the long-pursued network stations are doing, and carefully plots her own much less expensive opposition. When Bob Hope appears on a network comedy show, she schedules popular records to lure non-Hope fans. When Toscanini is conducting a radio symphony, she may feature hot jazz, interesting that portion of the population with short hair.

Recently WNEW began a program digesting current periodicals especially for the blind— and lazy. It has tossed programs to stamp collectors and other hobbyists, given language lessons and played records of great scenes for stay-at-home theater lovers. "Listen," she says, "we'd start a program for bird-watchers if we found enough were around to make it worthwhile."

IN THE COURSE of all this, however, WNEW has picked up many industry awards and plaques for public service.

The station won wide acclaim recently when it turned out singing commercials plugging such commodities as tolerance, the United Nations and home safety. Stations all over the country borrowed the jingles.

Miss Judis also is stuck with the responsibility for creating that avis Americanus, the disk jockey. Remembering New York's night workers —cops, firemen, charwomen, insomniacs, milkmen and stay-out-lates—she put on all-night record-playing sessions. They have been copied by almost every station in the country, including the big boys.

The DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

It Was a Dirty Trick But It Worked

"I shouldn't have done it," he confesses, "but I did. I was desperate.

"I was late for a 4:30 appointment with a prospective employer, and I needed the job desperately. But there was no place to park except on streets where parking was banned from 4 to 6:30 p. m.

"The idea came to me in a flash, and I acted on it before my conscience had a chance to interfere. Pulling up to the curb, I opened the car's hood, and looked sadly at the motor for a moment.

"Leaving the hood up, I walked off—as if to phone for a tow truck—and kept my appointment instead. There was no ticket on the car when I got back, almost an hour later. But now I feel ashamed of myself for taking advantage of the cop on that beat."

P. S.: He got the job, and promises not to be a stinker any more.

PUC'S ANSWER

Hacker W. M. McIntyre of 1600 16th st. nw, raised a good point here yesterday. He told of picking up a fourth zone (90 cents) passenger who got a one-zone friend to share the cab with him for a few blocks, thereby cutting the total fare to 70 cents—50 for himself and 20 for the friend.

Mac wanted to know why the PUC couldn't protect cab drivers against this type of chisel. Chairman James H. Flanagan puts it this way:

"We're familiar with the situation, of course. It's the one thing hackers have complained about since the zone system went into effect here.

"We haven't changed our regulations, however, for a number of reasons. For one thing, to protect the hacker against the possible loss of a dime or 20 cents, we'd have to make the regulations too complicated. There would be too much confusion regarding proper charges.

"At present, the passenger always knows what his fare will be when he gets into a cab, either for single occupancy or group riding, and the system works well.

"Besides, this situation doesn't occur too frequently, and we feel that inasmuch as we've got to have an arbitrary set of rules to govern this city's 10,000 cab drivers, the present regulations are—on the whole—about as good as we can hope for.

"We can't be perfect; any generalized procedure is apt to work a hardship on somebody, at some time. I feel we've kept the inequities to a minimum."

Chairman Flanagan presents sound arguments for leaving the rates unchanged. But 10,000 hackers, trying to make an honest living, have an equally valid reason for feeling that there's something wrong with a system that permits them to collect 90 cents for hauling one passenger four zones, but only 70 cents for hauling two.

Why would it be undesirably complicated to add one simple provision to the present regulations—to be effective only when a cab has been shared by two passengers? (When three or more are hauled, the hacker makes money.)

This special provision for two might read something like this: "If there is more than one zone difference in the destinations of the two passengers, each shall pay 10 cents more than the posted group rate."

Try it out in various combinations, and I think you'll find it eliminates every inequity short of the fifth zone—which is seldom a factor.

GIVE-AWAYS

"Affectionate 3-month-old kittens." (Wisconsin 6342.)

"Sweet tempered 4-month-old male kitten." (Ordway 5572.)

INCIDENTAL INTELLIGENCE

Charlie Williams of 1405 53d ave., Hillside, Md, (he drives a (District cab) says he knows where East st., West st., and South st. are to be found—but "there's no North st. in the District." I suppose he's right—but I wonder why.

THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Emmett Vowell of 1908 Biltmore st. nw., visited his grandmother this summer, and was mightily impressed with a verse by Edward Hersey Richards which she had framed on her wall:

A wise old owl sat on an oak,
The more he saw the less he spoke;
The less he spoke the more he heard;
Why aren't we like that wise old bird?

ANSWER THAT ONE, PAL

Here's a story that might be included in it. One day last week a local hacker picked up Gordon Dean, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, and Andre Sengier, boss of the Belgian company that mines uranium in the Congo. They were headed for the White House, to call on Mr. Truman.

During the trip, the hacker joined the conversation (what cab driver doesn't in Washington?) and made several references to "Harry."

"Who is this 'Harry' you speak of?" Sengier asked.

"Why Harry Truman, the President," replied the driver.

"You call your President 'Harry'?" asked Sengier in some surprise.

"Why not?" shot back the taxi jockey, "you call your King 'Leopold,' don't you?"

WISHING WELL—

Campaign Claims Can Backfire

By Drew Pearson

LOS ANGELES.—These are days so many claims are made by candidates that it's hard for the average voter to sift the true facts before election time.

Pearson

As a result, voting in a hurry and repenting at leisure sometimes saddles unfortunate Congressmen on the Nation.

Take for instance, Jack Hardy, GOP candidate for Congress in Helen Gahagan Douglas's old district in Los Angeles. His campaign literature features pictures of himself and wife with his three children. The picture even names the children "Tertie, Margaret and Charlie" and quotes them as saying: "We live with Jack (Hardy) and know what kind of a person he is at home. We know he is a professional man, not a professional politician."

The three Hardy children, whom the GOP candidate thus features in his literature look to be around the ages of 12 to 14. However, the interesting thing is that candidate Hardy married his wife only last May and Tertie, Margaret and Charlie are not his children. They are the children of his present wife, Georgia Sibley, by a former marriage.

Furthermore, the only child of his own which candidate Hardy ever had was the daughter of Actress Fay Helm, who divorced him five years ago. At that time, Hardy relinquished all rights to custody of his baby, including even the right of visitation. It was agreed, however, that he would contribute $35 a month to the baby's support.

However, even this mere pittance was too much. He defaulted on payments to the tune of $800 and, under a new court decree, now pays nothing.

Yet the man who now aspires to sit in the halls of Congress plays himself up in his campaign literature as a great family man, and quotes his stepchildren who have been with him only since May as saying: "We live with Jack and know what kind of a person he is at home. We know he is a professional man, not a professional politician."

Stockpiling Crisis

The inside story has never been told of the shocking inefficiency and neglect that forced Hubert Howard out as chairman of the Munitions Board. Meanwhile, President Truman has let six weeks go by without appointing a new chairman to clean up the mess.

The public doesn't realize it, but the Munitions Board is just as vital to production planning as the Joint Chiefs of Staff are to military planning. The board is responsible for charting the Nation's industrial needs and stockpiling rubber, tin, quinine, manganese and other materials, regarding which we were caught short at Pearl Harbor.

Yet the tragic fact is that Korea found our stockpiles dangerously low and with no production blueprint at all for the future. Even to this day, the Munitions Board hasn't come up with a single plan or estimate to guide wartime production.

This nearly resulted in disaster a week before the Inchon landing, when the Air Force almost ran out of aviation gasoline. The manufacturers were supposed to keep a 30-day supply on hand in the Far East, but had no production goal to guide them. As a result, the supply ran dry on September 6, and our planes were nearly grounded on the eve of the Inchon landing. A gasoline shipment arrived in the nick of time, but the supply dropped dangerously low again while our troops were storming Seoul.

Shortage of Wool

The Munitions Board also permitted the Nation's wool supply to dwindle so low that the army is short of wool to clothe its troops for the severe Korean winter. As a result, the Government is now frantically bidding for wool on the Australian market. The irony is that the Agriculture Department had plenty of wool last year but couldn't get the Munitions Board to take it over for stockpiling.

Anxious not to get caught short of cotton for uniforms, the Munitions Board in August what its needs would be.

No answer was received for more than 30 days, then a note came back from the Munitions Board, advising that the man in charge of the cotton problem was out of town. Desperately, the Agriculture Department made its own estimate by going over the board's head and getting figures direct from the armed services.

One trouble with the Munitions Board is that it listens to the big producers, which want to use raw materials in normal civilian production, and not have them stockpiled for emergencies instead. For example, the Munitions Board has been lulled by the giant Aluminum Co. of America and, as a result, has done virtually nothing about stockpiling precious aluminum. Yet in case of total war, 90 percent of our aluminum output would be used up by the military, leaving civilians almost none.

One reason for the board's inefficiency is that it has inherited too many castaways from the three military services. When the board called upon the armed forces for personnel, it didn't get any top men.

But Chairman Hubert Howard, as coal company executive didn't set a model for efficiency. That's why President Truman gave Stuart Symington over-all mobilization powers and, later, demanded Howard's resignation. At the time he ordered Howard's resignation, the President remarked to White House aides that, right after he appointed Howard, he went to Europe for four months.
